Preface

Twelve centuries back, Jagadguru Sri Adi Shankaracharya established His first and foremost Peetham, the Dakshinamnaya Sringeri Sri Sharada Peetham for the sustenance and propagation of Sanatana-Dharma. Since then, the Peetham has been adorned by an unbroken chain of Acharyas who have been erudite scholars and dispassionate saints. Out of their innate compassion, the Jagadgurus have been incessantly teaching the path of Dharma to the multitude of Their disciples, through Their very lives, Their teachings and by the establishment of temples, Pathashalas and other charitable institutions.

The 33rd Acharya of the Peetham, Jagadguru Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji was a great yogi, a repository of Shastraic knowledge, an expert in Mantra-Shastra and an epitome of compassion. A life sketch of the Mahaswamiji was first published in Kannada by the Peetham in 1924. It was penned by GuruSevaPraveena Sri Srikantha Shastri, the then Sarvadhikari (agent) of the Math who had the fortune of serving the Mahaswamiji for many years. It is this work that forms the primary source of this book. While compiling this book, excerpts from an abridged English translation, of the Tamil version of the aforesaid Kannada book, by Sri B V Kameshwara Iyer, titled “The life of Sri Jagadguru Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Narasimha Bharati Swami of Sringeri” have been included.

One is able to see several striking similarities between the great master, the Jagadguru Sri Adi Shankaracharya and the Mahaswamiji when one reads about their respective lives and accomplishments. No wonder, the Mahaswamiji was extolled as ‘Abhinava Shankara’, a reincarnation of the great master Sri Adi Shankaracharya.

It was the Mahaswamiji who rediscovered the birthplace of Sri Adi Shankaracharya at Kalady. Ever since the rediscovery, a perennial stream of spiritual influence stemming from Kalady has been flowing and flooding our land. If India and the world today celebrate Shankara-Jayanti commemorating the birth of Sri Adi Shankaracharya, it is solely due to the Mahaswamiji who instituted this celebration way back in the late 19th century. It is again due to the Mahaswamiji’s efforts that we have with us the complete works of Sri Adi Shankaracharya.

This book also contains a brief life sketch of the Mahaswamiji’s Guru, Jagadguru Sri Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji (32nd Acharya of the Peetham) in the beginning. It was this revered Acharya who initiated the Mahaswamiji into Sannyasa at a tender age of 8, and groomed Him.

This book also comprises a section in which the hymn ‘Gurudvaya Abhya Anusandhanam’ composed by the present Acharya of Sri Sringeri Sharada Peetham, Jagadguru Sri Sri Bharati Tirtha Mahaswamiji has been presented. The hymn beautifully portrays the non-difference between Sri Adi Shankaracharya and Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji.

It is very apt that this book is getting released on the special occasion of the Centenary Celebrations (23rd May 2010) of the rediscovery of Kalady and the Kumbhabhishekam of the temples of Adi Shankaracharya and Goddess Sharadamba. Thanks to each one of the team members of Shankara Advaita Research Centre, Sringeri, who had worked in the publication of the book; special thanks to a disciple for his tireless efforts while editing the contents of this book.

We offer our humblest pranams to Jagadguru Sri Sri Bharati Tirtha Mahaswamiji, whose blessings, inspiration and guidance has made this work possible. We are sure that the life of the Mahaswamiji will serve as an inspiration to all the devotees to tread the path of dharma and achieve higher good.

“I worship Jagadguru Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji, the king of ascetics, a repository of knowledge, a treasure-house of mantras, who is ever immersed in the Self and who is none other than the Lord Shiva human form.”

1. Parentage and Early Life

More than a century ago, there was a pious and orthodox Telugu Brahmin, named Yajnanarayana Shastri, who lived in a village called Yedatore on the banks of the Cauvery. He was of Kashyapa-gotra, his sutra was Apastamba and he belonged to the mulaka-nadu sect.

It has been enjoined in the Manusmriti:

अथीत्व विधिव्वदुन्पुनौध्रोत्ताध्य धर्मंत: 1
द्व्या च शक्तिः यत्रार्ध्नो मायक निवेशयत् ॥

(Having learnt the Vedas as prescribed (in the Shastras), begotten progeny in a Dharmic (righteous) manner, offered oblations to one’s capacity by means of Yajnas (sacrifices), should one engage one’s mind in the pursuit of Moksha (liberation).)

In accordance with the dictates of scriptural passages such as this, Yajnanarayana Shastri first studied the Krishna-Yajurveda, his own Vedic-shakha, according to the rules of discipline prescribed for Brahmacarya; married in due time and settled as a householder, observing the rules of hospitality and worshipping the Gods in sacrifice; begot children for the perpetration of his family, as in duty bound; and when he turned sixty, he set his heart on the means of liberation from the trammels of Samsara (the cycle of births and deaths). Desirous of striving for liberation, he first went to a Sandhyamantapa close to Argyapushkarani on the banks of the Cauvery, a few miles away from his native village and spent some time alone there – away from his wife and children – to test for himself, how far he could resist the temptations of home surroundings and, when he found that the ties of family and property had no hold over him, he betook himself to a place far removed from his village – Cheranmadevi, in Tirunelveli District which was then a small and beautiful colony of Brahmins performing Agnihotra (daily fire sacrifice). He spent some time there, again testing the strength of his determination, and then he assumed Sannyasa. No one in his house knew of his stay at Cheranmadevi or sanneyasa during his life-time.

It was only after his death that they came to know of the circumstances in which he assumed sanneyasa from a letter written by some of the inhabitants of Cheranmadevi, as per his wish at the time of his leaving his mortal coil. The relatives then performed the ceremonies in Yedatore in the manner prescribed in the scriptures.

In the line of this mula-purusha (ancestor) was born Narasimha Shastri, who was the first to leave the village, Yedatore, and seek his fortune in the Court of the Maharaja of Mysore. He settled with his family in the old Agrahara (a locality) of Mysore town. He had two sons and, according to the custom of the family, the elder son was named as Narasimha Shastri; the younger one was named Rama Shastri. While Narasimha Shastri studied the Vedas as also the Kavyas and Alankara, Rama Shastri took to the study of the Vedas, the Kavyas and went on to study Nyaya, Indian dialectics, under his father. After his father's death, he continued his Nyaya studies under Tirupati Srinivasacharya, then a pundit renowned for his skill in Tarka-Shastra. He then went through a course of Sri Shankaracharya's Bhashyas (commentaries) and became a laureate among the court-pundits. He became widely known as Kunigal Rama Shastri. His name and fame for scholarship spread throughout South India and hundreds of students from the farthest corners of South India flocked to him for instruction, especially in the Nyaya-Shastra. The students who returned to their homes after finishing their course of studies under him became profound scholars. He wrote a very erudite work on Nyaya-Shastra, named Shatakoti, which has been held in high esteem by the renowned pundits in Nyaya.

His great erudition was only equalled by his piety. His belief in the Vedas and the Shastras was extraordinary. His faith and worship of Shiva was innate. The purity of the great pundit’s life was unquestionable. This great scholar was patronized by Krishnaraja Wodeyar III and, like his father, had earned a permanent place in the heart of His Highness and was one of the most distinguished among the learned men of his court.

Rama Shastri’s wife, the virtuous Lakshmamma, was devoted to the service of her husband. He and his wife, a model of chastity, love and obedience, observed fasts and vigils, worshipping Lord Sri Medha-Dakshinamurti, a form of Paramashiva and praying for long-living children; and in the thirty fourth year of his age, on the thirteenth day of Vaishakha in the year Sarvari (1840-41 C.E.), a son was born to him. It was a festive day in honour of God Narasimha — Narasimha-Jayanti. Both for this reason and following the family precedent of naming the first son after their tutelary deity Narasimha, the newborn infant was named Lakshminarasimha. Rama Shastri and his wife were then living in Nanjangud on the banks of the Kapila, performing daily worship to God Srikantheswara. Another son was born to the couple in the month Vaishakha of the year Paraabhava when they were living in Kanchi (Kanchipuram) in Southern India. This child was named Yagnanarayana Shastri after a very early ancestor of his family referred to in the beginning of this chapter. Sometime after this, Rama Shastri became the father of a daughter.

In her fiftieth year, Lakshmamma, wife of Kunigal Rama Shastri, was again in the family way. This time, the Shastri devoutly wished and prayed for a son; he performed the Pumsavana rite, a ceremony which is usually performed only during the first pregnancy of a woman. 'Pumsavana' means a rite for the birth of a male child. Traditionally Hindus wish for a male child as their firstborn, for he alone could continue their line; the ceremonies to be performed by him in honour of his ancestors, have power to rescue them from the unblessed abodes, which their sinful deeds, while on earth, might have been assigned to them after death. A Brahmin, the scriptures say, is born with three debts to discharge:

जाप्यानो ह वै ब्राह्मणश्चिरिन्द्रणेः ऋणवान जायते। व्रह्वचर्येण
ऋणिष्यो, यद्धेन देवेभ्यः प्रजया पितृभ्यः।

The debt to the Rishis, the seers of the Vedic Mantras, is to be discharged by Brahmacharya – through study of the Veda under a qualified teacher, observing the rules of discipline prescribed for a student; that due to the Gods is to be discharged by due worship of the Gods and that to the Pitrus or ancestors is cleared by marrying after completion of studentship and begetting (male) children. Sage Apastamba says that the rite called Pumsavana ensures the birth of a male child.¹

Kunigal Rama Shastri had a number of students under him and among them the most devoted, hence the most favoured, was one Subrahmanya Shastri, who had come to him from the chola-desha². During the time of his wife’s pregnancy, Rama Shastri had set out with one or two of his pupils to pay a visit to Lord Srikantheshwara in Nanjangud.

On his way, a thought came to him about the name he should choose for his son about to be born. He thought within himself, “My two boys already born have not been given the name of Dakshinamurthy, even though they were the fruit of His grace. I must certainly give to the son about to be born one of the names of Paramashiva”. Rama Shastri then asked Subrahmanya: "What name shall I give to the child about to be born? I should prefer one of the names of Paramashiva, whom I am daily worshipping.” The pupil kept quiet.

The teacher pressed him for a reply; Subrahmanya said respectfully: “Sire, the child is yet to be born; whether it is going to be a male or a female child, God alone knows. Do you not think that it is a little premature, just now, to cast about for a name for a child still in the womb?” The teacher grew impatient at his reply and said, "Fie on your faith in the Veda. Don't you know that I have performed the Pumsavana rite for the child in the womb as a special case this time, and that the Shastras say that the rite, if performed with faith and in the prescribed form, is sure to result in the birth of a male child?" The rebuke went home; the student felt how far below he was to his teacher in implicit, unquestioned faith in the Shastras. He humbly replied: “Master, it is quite possible that Paramashiva, the object of your worship may himself be born in answer to your prayers. It would therefore be highly appropriate to name the child ‘Shivaswami’ (a name in vogue in the Chola-desha)”. The teacher was satisfied with the choice of name and resolved to give that name to the child on the nama-karana (naming ceremony) day, generally, the eleventh day after birth.
A son was born, in justification of his faith, in the year, Pingala S.S 1781 (Shalivahana Shaka) (11\textsuperscript{th} March 1858 C.E), Thursday, Phalguna, Krishna-paksha, Ekadashi. It was just 9.00 P.M. and the hour-gun boomed at his birth, which was considered a very happy augury. Kunigal Rama Shastri, elated with joy, went to the big lake in the city for the necessary ablutions, plunged into the water, jumping from a great height, so that huge sprays of water rose up high and fell down all-round. As per the \textit{Shastras} this way of splashing the water is good for the salvation of one’s departed ancestors.

Shivaswami, so the baby was named, grew up a winsome child. He delighted his parents by his childish sports, which consisted in smearing his fair limbs with the ashes of his father's Aupasana (a daily ritual for householders) hearth, clapping his hands and dancing and lisping words of divine praise, in imitation of his father when he performed his daily Shiva-Puja. However, Rama Shastri did not live long to enjoy the company of his illustrious son. Destiny was such that before Shivaswami completed two years, on the fourth day of the bright half of Magha in Siddharthi, he lost his father.

Lakshminarasimha Shastri, the eldest son of Kunigal Rama Shastri, was then nineteen years old. He took upon himself the management of his family after his father’s death and protected his mother and brothers and conducted himself in a manner worthy of the dignity and status of his distinguished father. He had studied Sanskrit, Kavya, Nataka and Alankara as well as Tarka under his father.

As Lakshminarasimha Shastri in his childhood was frequently afflicted with ill health, his father was not anxious to press forward his studies. Being aware of his delicate health, Rama Shastri never set him severe tasks in lessons as he did with the rest of his pupils. But due to Ishwara’s grace and as a result of his training in past births, his intelligence was exceptional. He was often instructing his father’s pupils and his own classmates as well as others independently by himself; and though his own studies were somewhat limited, his proficiency in Tarka was of a high order partly on account of his habit of instructing his classmates and partly by his natural force of intellect. Once when Lakshminarasimha Shastri was sixteen years of age, his father happened to be away from Mysore, travelling in South India. Some learned men from Southern India came to Mysore to take part in learned disputations at the royal court and win rewards. Lakshminarasimha Shastri heard that His Highness, the Maharaja, was anxious as to who in Mysore could hold disputations with the foreign pundits and so, attended the court.

As he was so young, he was not noticed either by the Maharaja or by the assembly of Vidwans. When the disputations began, the young Shastri pressed forward and began to take part in the discussions. When the discussions were concluded, both the foreign Vidwans who found it hard to meet the arguments of Lakshminarasimha Shastri and the court Vidwans were astonished at the young Shastri’s erudition and superb articulation. The joy of the Maharaja knew no bounds and the prestige of the court had been upheld so unexpectedly. The ability of the young Shastri was highly commended and he was presented with two gold bangles, a necklace of pearls and other honours even before the foreign pundits were given their rewards.

After his father’s death, Lakshminarasimha Shastri perfected himself in all the Shastras that he had learnt and set out on a travel. He seems to have visited Travancore; it is said that many famous Vidwans of that place were struck with astonishment at his ability in the disputations. Like his father, he taught Tarka to a great many students. He was one of the foremost among the learned men of the Mysore court during the later part of the reign of Krishna Raja Wodeyar III and for a few years during the reign of His Highness Chamarajendra Wodeyar.

As Lakshminarasimha Shastri grew older, his fame as a scholar spread even wider. His father’s celebrated work on Logic, Shatakoti, was criticized by some scholars who aspired to become renowned by attacking so famous a work. Having heard that Shatakoti had been criticized adversely by some pundits, he obtained a copy of the criticism and wrote a powerful defence of that work under the name Shatakoti-mandana. He also wrote a very learned gloss, ‘Nyayenduashekhara’ on the Brahmanandiya, a famous text of Advaita-Vedanta in which he met the criticisms launched by Vishistadwaitins, though unfortunately he did not live to complete it.

A commentary on Samanya-nirukti, a logical work, found its way from Bengal and became known to Mysore Vidwans. The manuscript abounded with errors and none but a master could find out the correct reading. Naturally, the scholars found it difficult to comprehend the commentary. Lakshminarasimha Shastri sent for the work, carefully examined it from end to end, corrected all its mistakes and made the work known to the outside world by teaching it independently to his pupils. This story was narrated by Gopichettipalayam Ramaswami Shastri who was a pupil of Lakshminarasimha Shastri and who held recently for a time\(^1\), the place of Pundit in Advaita Vedanta Shastra in the Sanskrit College, Mysore. From these facts, we come to know that Lakshminarasimha Shastri was a scholar of a powerful and versatile intellect.

The subject of this biography, Shivaswami, who later became Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji, after he ascended the throne of transcendental wisdom, the Peetham of the Sringeri Sharada Peetham, acquired his proficiency in Tarka and Vedanta at the hands of Lakshmi Narasimha Shastri. Shivaswami lost his mother in his fifth year. Thereafter he came under the sole guardianship of his elder brother.

2. Sannyasa and Tutelage

Dakshinamnaya Sri Sharada Peetham at Sringeri is the first and foremost of the four Peethams established by the renowned 8th century philosopher saint Sri Adi Shankaracharya, the principal exponent of Advaita (non-dualism) Vedanta. The Divinity of Knowledge, Goddess Sri Sharada, installed at Sringeri by Sri Adi Shankaracharya graces the Peetham as the presiding deity. The Peetham has been adorned by illustrious and unbroken lineage of Acharyas since Sri Sureshvaracharya, primary disciple of Sri Adi Shankaracharya. The Acharyas of the Peetham uphold the activities of the Peetham towards the propagation and sustenance of Sanatana-Dharma while pervading the lives of many thousands of disciples as their spiritual guide.

During the greater part of the nineteenth century, the Peetham was presided over by Sri Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji as its 32nd Pontiff. He was a native of Sringeri. He was born in 1798 C.E. His adventurous spirit is shown by his having completed the pilgrimage to Benares twice on foot before he was twenty years old. People of the present day who can do the pilgrimage in a few days or a few hours by a train or by flight cannot realise what untold hardships had to be endured in those days; a pilgrim returned safe from Benares was hailed with ecstatic joy, almost as if he had returned from 'the bourne from which no traveller returns!

In 1817 C.E., the 31st Jagadguru Sri Abhinava Sacchidananda Bharati Mahaswamiji, conscious of his approaching day for disembodiment (Videhakaivalya) initiated the returned pilgrim as Jagadguru Sri Narasimha Bharati and ordained him as his successor to the Peetham. On the sixth day after this, the 31st Jagadguru left the mortal body and the youthful initiate ascended the Yoga-Peetham. He had hardly enough time to acquire scholarship; he could scarcely get acquainted with the barest outlines of the administration of the Peetham. But the young Swamiji set to work with a will. Undaunted by the heavy odds, he soon mastered the details of the administrative machinery. To secure proficiency in the several branches of learning, he invited eminent pundits from outside and always kept them by his side, so that the atmosphere about him was redolent of culture and learning; and he, himself, became a great scholar worthy of the traditions of the exalted Peetham.

All this took years of strenuous work; but he never spared himself. Once he made up his mind, he allowed nothing to stand in his way. He could never be swayed from his purpose. His will was indomitable; his firmness of character, rarely exampled. A great scholar he wanted to be, and he became one. The affairs of the Math were not satisfactory when he ascended the Peetham. He wanted to set matters right and in a few years, he brought everything to order, by paying personal attention to every detail of administration. He wanted to acquire psychical powers by concentration of will and he became a great yogi through intense meditation and perseverance. He conquered sleep and spent twenty out of the twenty-four hours of the day in divine service (Puja) and practice of Mantra and Yoga.

To cite an instance: In 1858 C.E., the Mahaswamiji was halting at Bangalore, in the Maharaja’s choultry. The State of Mysore was then in charge of a British Chief Commissioner, Col. Bowring. The Chief Commissioner wished to see for himself whether all that was represented of the Mahaswamiji was true. Accordingly, he went one night, incognito, to the residence of the Mahaswamiji at about 1 A.M. and asked the sentinels at the gate what the Mahaswamiji was doing. He was told that the Mahaswamiji was then engaged in divine service. The Commissioner requested the attendant to draw up the curtain behind which the Mahaswamiji was seated. They did so and he saw the Mahaswamiji from a distance with his head bent down and offering flowers to the deity, oblivious of his surroundings. The Chief Commissioner took off his hat in reverence and returned with the conviction that the Mahaswamiji was indeed a holy personage. Some of his letters to the Mahaswamiji attest to the sincere esteem he had for the sage.

When he was barely forty years of age, the Mahaswamiji gave up his normal food, subsisting merely on the bitter fruits of Momordica charantia (bitter gourd) for the rest of his life. He never showed any impatience with anything that displeased him but quietly set to work and never stopped until it was corrected. This Guru possessed an inborn felicity to turn the people towards righteous path by his powerful speech and profound silence. The then Maharaja of Mysore, Krishnaraja Wodeyar, pithily gave expression to this characteristic feature of the Mahaswamiji in the ‘Ashtottara-shatamavali’ which he composed in honour of the Mahaswamiji, who is called here ‘Pratijnataartha-Sadhaka’, the accomplisher of whatever he once decides upon.

After acquiring scholarship and Mantrasiddhi, Yogic power, and after restoring order in the affairs of the Peetham, he resolved to go on tours throughout India, propagate the Sanatana-Dharma and from the contributions received during such tours make the Math as prosperous to handle the Dharmic activities as it was in the days when the Emperors of Vijayanagar lavished their munificence on the Math.

It is ascertained from the collection of wills, bequests and other records of his lifetime that famous rulers like the Peshwas of Poona, the Holkars of Indore, the Scindias of Gwalior, the Gaekwads of Baroda and the Maharajas of Mysore and Travancore, besides a number of Chiefs, Zamindars and Jagirdars were devotedly attached to him and showed their reverence to him in many ways and that the Nizam of Hyderabad had great regard for him and was anxious to comply with his wishes in every aspect, as well as be helpful to him.

He visited the important native States in Northern India. He was received everywhere with respect. Wealthy rulers waited upon him with love and reverence and loaded him with wealth and precious jewels, attracted by his magnetic personality. Nobles and Jagirdars were no less behind the great rulers. All the wealth that he thus earned, all the valuable jewels, went to replenish the coffers of the Math.

Telugu was his mother-tongue; Kannada was the language of his native place; Tamil was that of the surrounding districts; Marathi and Hindustani, he acquired during his Northern trip. All these languages he spoke as if each one was his mother-tongue. It is needless to add here his proficiency in Sanskrit among his linguistic accomplishments. Visitors were no less impressed by the naturalness of tone and accent, when he spoke to them in their respective tongues than by the easy flow of his speech and elegance of expression.

He spent over forty years in his trips. His retinue was large, wherever he went; his paraphernalia were suited to his rank, for he would not stint an iota of the dignity of his office, where the prestige of the Peetham he presided over was concerned. It was a huge camp that went with him, horses and elephants, cows with their frisking calves, servants and sepoys and horsemen and provisions for them in store, sufficient for months together and refilled from time to time. Inconveniences never daunted him. His own personal wants were very few; but he saw to it that those who followed him never felt any of the privations of travel.
Once in the course of his northern tour, he came to Nagpur, somewhere in the forties of the nineteenth century. It was then being ruled by the last of the Bhonsles. During the minority of the ruler, a huge treasure had accumulated.
When he attained his majority in 1830 C.E., he disclosed distaste for business and plunged in dissolute ways.

When the Mahaswamiji reached Nagpur, the Raja did not care to receive him in the manner suited to his dignity or show him the respects, which had been established by precedent. Though the Mahaswamiji had little regard for personal show he could not brook any affront to the dignity of the Peetham. He therefore, immediately left for Kamthi, a British Military station nine miles off and stayed there for two whole years.

As time passed, the Raja started experiencing various kinds of difficulties including bodily ailments. He soon realised that it was all due to the way in which he had behaved towards the holy yogi. He immediately went to see the Mahaswamiji at Kamthi and paid his respects in a proper manner and took him in procession in a grand style, himself walking all the way by the side of the Mahaswamiji’s ivory palanquin. The Mahaswamiji blessed the Raja, now a reformed soul, and soon after left the Raja’s capital.
In 1838 C.E., the Mahaswamiji went on a tour to Rameshwaram and halted in the third corridor of the great temple of Lord Ramanatha Swamy. There are several wells round the inner shrine, the chief of which is known as the koti-tirtha. It is customary for pilgrims to bathe in the water taken out of these wells and conclude the ablutions by having a bath from the water of the koti-tirtha, to carry to their places a vessel filled with the water of the tirtha, duly packed and sealed, to offer worship in their homes and conclude with the rituals prescribed in the scriptures. On sacred occasions, a little of this water from the vessel used to be taken out and mixed with the water required for ablutions, so as to purify the whole.

A certain class of priests, calling themselves 'Aryas' had constituted themselves as custodians of the koti-tirtha, held it under lock and key, levied a small fee on all who came to bathe in the water of the well and themselves took a vessel of water from the well and gave it to the pilgrims who came for the bath. The Mahaswamiji wished that his own attendants should take the water for his ablutions, direct from the well. This, the Aryan-brahmins would not allow. They were the custodians and would not permit others to take water out of the well.

The Mahaswamiji wanted to correct their arrogant attitude that the holy tirtha was just their personal possession. He went to another well to the south of the inner shrine, known as Sarva-tirtha and concluded his ablutions with the water from this well and said to the people assembled there, that henceforth, it would be enough for pilgrims to conclude their baths with the water of Sarva-tirtha. From this time forwards, the koti-tirtha was forsaken by pilgrims; even those who had till then accepted the priestly services of Arya-brahmins discontinued their services. Thus, left to themselves severely alone, the Arya-brahmins were deprived of their emoluments and reduced to great straits. The well, koti-tirtha, became filthy and insanitary for want of use. In 1872 C.E., the Mahaswamiji came to Madurai. There the Arya-brahmins from Rameshwaram came to him as a representative body and implored him to forgive them for their insolence and place them within reach of their means of subsistence. Accordingly, the Mahaswamiji went to Rameshwaram in 1873 C.E., caused the koti-tirtha to be drained and pouring sanctified water into the well from his pitcher declared that the koti-tirtha had now become purified and the crowning act of the pilgrims should be a bath with the water of the well. From that time onwards, the koti-tirtha has been restored to its original position.

During this tour, another instance of a similar nature occurred at Madurai. The Mahaswamiji, with his young disciple, was put-up in the Kalyana-Mantapa of the famous temple of Meenakshi. The young Mahaswamiji wanted, one day, to enter the innermost shrine and offer Puja to the deity. The officiating priests of the temple, however, disregarded propriety and impeded his entry. Thus prevented by the priests, ‘Bhattars’ as they were called, the young Mahaswamiji left the inner shrine, but the matter was reported to the Guru Mahaswamiji by the attendants. The Guru went to the temple one day and ordered two coconuts to be brought and by pronouncing certain mantras, transferred the Shakti of the Goddess to the coconuts and declared, to the thousands assembled at the spot, that he was taking the Goddess to the Math in the coconuts and that it would be sufficient for the devotees who came to worship in the temple, to offer coconuts, fruits and flowers by themselves and wave the camphor-light at the threshold before the altar. The late Dr. S.Subrahmanya Iyer, who afterwards became a judge of the High Court of Madras and officiated as Chief Justice for some time, was then the leader of the Bar in the Madurai District Court and he was the first to obey the order of the Mahaswamiji. His example was followed by hundreds of worshippers who visited the temple daily. The Bhattars were deprived of the income they derived from the divine service they used to offer on behalf of visitors. After months of privation and suffering, they came to their senses and approached Subrahmanya Iyer, and his uncle, Shankara Iyer, who then wielded the greatest possible influence throughout the district and begged them both to intercede for them with the Mahaswamiji and induce him to revoke the order he had issued. The Mahaswamiji, who was sojourning in the district, came once more to Madurai at their request and after transferring back the Shakti, declared that henceforth people might dedicate their offerings in the customary way.

Another protracted northern tour of Mahaswamiji started when he started feeling that the Maharaja of Mysore, Krishnaraja Wodeyar, was indifferent towards the Peetham. Meanwhile, not being informed about the whereabouts of the Mahaswamiji’s tour for years together, the Maharaja came to feel that he should not be indifferent any longer to the Sringeri Peetham, to which was mainly due all the prosperity of the State. He wrote to the Mahaswamiji repeatedly praying that he should come back to his province and bless him. Observing the change of mindset in the Maharaja from his repeated letters with prayers, the Mahaswamiji returned to Mysore.

The Mahaswamiji made use of the contributions from rulers of the great Northern States and from Jagirdars and noblemen, by procuring gold vessels and costly jewels set with precious stones, for the use of the Math and ornaments to the deities worshipped there; he granted endowments of rent-free land to pundits whom he caused to be settled at Sringeri and the surplus was spent in increasing the resources of the Sringeri jagir.

His subsequent tours were prompted by his desire to propagate the Sanatana-Dharma to his disciples throughout the land. The object for which the Peetham had been established by Sri Shankaracharya was that it should be one of the centres from which should radiate throughout the country spiritual light and faith in the Vaidika-marga (Vedic path) and steady adherence by all to the duties of the several Varnas (classes) and Ashramas (stages of life), as prescribed in the Shastras. This mission he executed wherever he went, preaching to the people in their vernaculars, in words that went home to them.

It has been already stated that he had acquired psychical powers through tapas, concentration of will. An example may here be given. A certain wealthy gentleman had constructed a palatial mansion at great cost. In course of time, a rumour spread around that it was haunted; that strange noises were heard in the building when darkness set in and that strange events occurred. It had thus become unfit for habitation. The Mahaswamiji proposed to visit this village in the course of his tour and a Srimukha (an order communicating the date of his arrival) was sent to the village. Preparations were made on a grand scale for the reception of the Guru and at the request of the owner of the big mansion it was resolved by the villagers to accommodate the Mahaswamiji in that mansion during his stay there, as the villagers believed that the stay of the Mahaswamiji in that house would free it from the haunting ghost and save it from the evil repute; and so it did.

One night, while the Mahaswamiji was engaged in intense meditation and Puja, an apparition, dressed like an attendant of the Mahaswamiji stood before him, and when the Mahaswamiji understood what it was, he threw some water over it and, at once, it ran yelling from the place and fell into the well at the backyard. The people rose in alarm and searched the well; but nothing was to be seen except the clothes of the attendant. They then came and prostrated themselves before the Guru and related to him the previous story about the house. In reply, the Mahaswamiji smiled and said that henceforth, there would be no trouble from ghosts in that house and the owner might safely reside there with his family. The above incident was related by the Mahaswamiji himself to his successor.

As the Mahaswamiji was fully aware of the inconveniences endured by him after the demise of his Guru only six days after his own assumption of sannyasa, he became anxious soon after reaching his sixtieth year to adopt a worthy disciple while he was himself in vigorous health, to conduct the education of his pupil in the proper manner, to make him well-acquainted with the practice of sannyasa and the methods of the administration of the Math and to make him in every way worthy of his exalted position. This anxiety increased from day to day and he was constantly obtaining and examining the horoscopes of eligible youths in Sringeri and elsewhere and also making enquiries for eligible horoscopes through His Highness Sri Krishnaraja Wodeyar III. Eight years were spent in these deliberations. No horoscope that had been examined till then was found to be satisfactory.

Then, one night, while the Mahaswamiji was worshipping God alone, he saw the figure of a married lady standing before him and heard it say to him, “Make room”. Then to his astonishment, the figure vanished. He considered it as a voice from the heavens and began to divine the meaning of it. He interpreted it to mean that he should leave Sringeri for the purpose of selecting a successor. It was not easy for him at that time to make all necessary arrangements and to leave the place at a moment's notice.

Nevertheless, the very next day, he visited the temple of Sri Sharada and worshipped the Goddess with great devotion and having prayed to the deity, left Sringeri on foot and came to Sacchidanandapura, which is just one mile outside Sringeri. He halted there for some days and having made all necessary arrangements travelled onwards and reached Mysore.

It is to be noted here that the thought of adopting a disciple first occurred to Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji when he was sixty years old in the year Pingala (1858 C.E) the very year Shivaswami, the third son of Kunigal Rama Shastri was born in Mysore. Though there is no means of knowing whether the Mahaswamiji was aware of this coincidence, it is a fact that as soon as he reached Mysore, the Mahaswamiji, after seeing the Maharaja and acquainting him with the object of his journey, sent for Lakshminarasimha Shastri, the eldest son of Kunigal Rama Shastri through the Maharaja, and also made him bring Shivaswami, who was under his protection. From this circumstance, it would seem as if the Mahaswamiji had somehow made up his mind at the time of setting out from Sringeri or even before it that Shivaswami and no other lad was eligible for the place of his successor.

The Mahaswamiji saw the eight year old lad who had accompanied his eldest brother and graciously asked him,
“Is there anything that I could do for you, my sweet child?” to which came the unhesitating reply in a Sanskrit verse:

अय्य दानकार्त्त्वं दानपात्रं
भवानेव दाता त्वदन्त्यं न चाचे।
भवद्विकामं सिध्यारं देहि महं
कृपाशील शम्भो कुतार्थोंत्रिम तस्मात्॥

(The time is now ripe for the gift. I am the recipient and You the giver. None else shall I ask. Vouchsafe unto me steadfast devotion unto You. O Shambho, full of mercy! I am thereby blessed.)

This was a prayer to Shiva, peculiarly appropriate to the occasion and in harmony with the Upanishadic doctrine that the Guru was God Himself in human form. The boy wanted nothing but steadfast devotion to the Guru. It is impossible to describe the delight of the Mahaswamiji at hearing these words from the boy. Many people might think it incredible that Shivaswami who was barely eight years old and ignorant of the world should have given the answer that he did; but as there is positive and direct evidence for this anecdote, the only conclusion at which one can arrive is the truth of the Shastraic theory that the experience of the past births endures in living beings. The Mahaswamiji felt that his daily prayer for many years at the time of worshipping Chandramoulishwara: “सच्छिण्यो में भूत्यात मच्छिण्यो पण्डतो भवतु”, that he might be blessed with a worthy disciple who could develop into a great Jnani had at last borne fruit. He sent Lakshminarasimha Shastri and Shivaswami home with due honours, rewarding the former liberally and giving the latter gifts of fruit and clothes suitable to his age.

To fulfill the objective of his tour, the Mahaswamiji had a conference with the Maharaja who was always graciously disposed towards the Math as well as was full of devotion and practical knowledge in worldly affairs. Mahaswamiji decided to appoint Shivaswami, the third son of Kunigal Rama Shastri, as his successor. Lakshminarasimha Shastri, at that time, was without a male issue. He looked upon his younger brother as his own son and brought him up with great tenderness and made him forget his sorrow at being so early rendered an orphan. Lakshminarasimha Shastri would seat Shivaswami on his lap and without overtaxing his childish powers, would teach him songs in praise of God, acquaint him with their meaning in easy words and rejoice at his intelligence and his splendid inheritance of merit from previous births. In the bright half of Jyeshta in the year Krodhana (1865 C.E.) he had performed the boy’s Upanayanam (investiture of sacred thread) ceremony and after the performance of the first Upakarma (annual Vedic ritual for all endowed with the sacred thread), he had commenced that teaching which is indispensable to Brahmins, the teaching of the Vedas. To this elder brother, the Mahaswamiji broached the question of nominating the boy for the Sringeri Peetham.

Lakshminarasimha Shastri did not like to part from the boy; for the installation of the boy as the heir-apparent to the Yoga Peetham meant that he should be taken away from his home surroundings and brought up henceforth under the auspices of the Guru. The latter said to the Shastri that, according to the prognostications of the horoscope, the boy would be in serious danger of life in his sixteenth year. The Shastri replied that it was all the more reason that a boy, with a short life before him, should not be selected for the Peetham. The Guru said that it was the very reason why the boy should be chosen; for entry into the fourth Ashrama was always considered a second birth, whereby the predestined fortunes of bodily birth would lose all force; moreover the grace of Sharadamba, the presiding deity of the Peetham, would avert all misfortunes as the boy would come under Her special protection. This had some effect on the mind of the guardian but still he was unwilling to part with the boy. Then, as per the Guru’s instruction the Maharaja convinced the Shastri by making him recollect the message of his father Kunigal Rama Shastri before his death entrusting the boys to the care and guardianship of Maharaja.

The sixth day of the dark half of Ashada of Akshaya, S.S. 1789 (Friday, the 2nd August, 1866) was appointed as the day for conferring sannyasa on Shivaswami and making him the disciple and successor of the Mahaswamiji. Orders were issued to all the palace officers to have the necessary preparations completed before that day.

On the day previous to the appointed day, the Maharaja sent a palanquin to fetch Shivaswami to the palace and received him in his private chambers. Seating him on his lap, the Maharaja talked to him with great affection. Seeing that the boy’s tuft of hair was loose, the Maharaja tried to tie it up in a knot but the hair being short would not allow him to do so. Thereupon, the Maharaja smilingly remarked, “Your hair refuses to be bound up, my sweet boy!” referring to the impending necessity for having it shaved on the morrow. He also said, “Today it is quite easy for me to make you sit by my side; but tomorrow, I shall have to offer you prostrations and stand at a distance.” With these and other words he tested the boy’s readiness to stand the ordeal. He then bade all the ladies of the palace bow before Shivaswami saying to them, “The dear little Shastri will become a great Guru tomorrow.” Presentations of fruit of a great many varieties were then offered to Shivaswami and he was sent back to the house with all the customary palace honours.

At 6 o’clock on the morning of the appointed day, the officials of the palace and the Math, came to Lakshminarasimha Shastri’s house with the palanquin, the chattra, the chamara and other palace honours, to conduct Shivaswami to the Math. The boy had suffered from severe headache the whole of the previous night after his return from the palace and the headache had not left him that morning. Subrahmanya Shastri, a native of chola-desha who had continued to be in the house as one of its inmates ever since the days of Kunigal Rama Shastri and had earned the confidence and regard of both Rama Shastri and his son Lakshminarasimha Shastri gave Shivaswami a bath, made him perform his morning Sandhyavandana and Agnikarya and having spoken to Lakshminarasimha Shastri who was lying in great affliction, such words of consolation as were appropriate, made Shivaswami prostrate before his elder brother for the last time and lifted him up and placed him in the palanquin, brought him to the Math and led him before the Mahaswamiji.

The Mahaswamiji was greatly pleased at seeing the boy upon whom he had set his heart, standing before him, ready to receive sannyasa and sent him to the temple of Lakshmiramana Swami, the place selected for the purpose of performing the ceremonies concerned. There Shivaswami was again made to bathe and perform the other rites that form part of the sannyasa ceremony. For the purpose of making Preshoccharana, (the declaration of renunciation), Shivaswami was conducted on foot to the lake known as Karangi-kere. Sri Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji also came there and as soon as Shivaswami had made the declaration, he called the boy into his presence, gave him the Kaupina (loin cloth), Kashaya (ochre robes), a Danda (stick), a Kamandala (water-pot) and Padukas (sandals) necessary for a Sannyasin and returned to the temple of Lakshmiramana Swami with his disciple.

There the young Sannyasin received at the hands of Sri Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji the Mahavakya-Upadesha (initiation into the great Upanishadic sentences) and the Yogapatta (title); the other ceremonies were also performed. While these ceremonies were taking place, the Maharaja was present in the hall which was crowded with palace Vidwans and all the prominent persons of Mysore.

The Yoga-patta conferred on the new Swami, ‘Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Narasimha Bharati’ was a long compound name; but the Guru wanted that the name of his Guru Sacchidananda, who was a great yogi, should be given to the initiate; the pundits assembled there were of the opinion that Shiva, the first part of the name given by the father should be added; the Maharaja who was present throughout the ceremonies thought his Guru’s name (Narasimha Bharati) should also be added. The result of all this was a long name; people were content to call him the younger Swami. Then the Maharaja and all the pundits and others assembled paid homage to the new Swamiji.

By the time all the ceremonies were completed in strict accordance with the *Shastra*ś, evening came on. The little Swami being so young and having suffered from severe headache the previous night, besides being subjected to fasting and physical hardship from morning till night, was greatly tired. He was again made to bathe and sit by the side of his Guru and perform the evening Ahnika ceremony. He was then given some refreshment consisting of a light meal of fried grains, and made to sleep on an antelope skin by the side of his Guru while the latter performed his evening worship.

The boy soon fell asleep and was heard to murmur in his sleep ‘Sarvoham’, ‘Sarvoham’, ‘Sarvoham’, meaning ‘I am all’, ‘I am all’, ‘I am all’. Was it cosmic consciousness that had come to him on the very first day of his initiation into the fourth order - the feeling of the identity of his Self with the whole universe of existing things? The scriptures say that this great experience had come to great sages like Shuka and Vamadeva when they were infants. The Guru who was then engaged in his usual meditation heard the murmured words. What should have been the delight and amazement of the Guru on that occasion! What should have been the force of experience of past births of the young Swami!

On the second day of the Swami’s sannyasa, following the practice of the Math, the ceremony of Pattabhisheka (coronation) was performed with great pomp. On this occasion, the Maharaja and the Chief Commissioner, Col. Bowring and the other high officials of the State came to the Math and were present during the installation of the young Swami, offered costly gifts and paid him the respects due to his exalted position.

The Maharaja asked the boy on this occasion what he wanted. The reply was that two young elephants were what he desired. Asked what for, he replied that they were wanted for being stationed one on each side of the gate of the Sharadamba temple during Puja time waving a Chowry each with the trunk. The Maharaja was immensely pleased with the reply and ordered that a young cow-elephant which alone was available then in the palace stables should be immediately sent to the Math. This elephant became a favourite with the young Swami and accompanied him

Sri Narasimha Bharati was greatly pleased at the success of his efforts for a period of eight years to acquire a worthy disciple, thanks to the grace of Sri Sharadamba and the powerful influence of the Maharaja. He decided to perform the Chaturmasya-Sankalpa (stay in a single place for two / four months) and the Vyasa-Puja for that year on the banks of the Cauvery. Helped by the Maharaja, he came to Pashchimavahini near Srirangapatnam and underwent the Chaturmasya ceremony.

The old Guru now wished that the young Swami should get accustomed to the tradition of the Math and the duties and responsibilities of touring. For constant touring throughout the extensive jurisdiction of the Peetham was required for teaching to the people the Vaidika-Dharma as laid down in the scriptures and imparting the higher Upanishadic-Vidya to such as were competent and in proportion as they could profit by it. It was not enough that the Guru should be deeply versed in the *Shastra*s. His eloquence should be persuasive and convincing and his personality should be an inspiration to those who come in contact with him. So, the Guru had the intention of taking the young Swami on an extended tour. After the Chaturmasya-Sankalpa had been fulfilled, he proceeded on his further travel taking the young Swami with him to Mysore.

The Guru’s watchfulness in providing for the literary education of his young charge and his proper upbringing, in the midst of a protracted tour, was indicative of his practical foresight and solicitude and love. In order to teach Amara (Sanskrit lexicon) and Shabdas (nouns and their declensions) he engaged an old pundit by name Kunigal Shama Shastri who was in his time a pupil of the late Kunigal Rama Shastri.

The Guru surrounded the young Swami with promising intelligent and well-behaved boys of his age, who could board and study with him and also kept him out of the harm's way. When his secular studies for the day were over, the disciple was kept by the Guru by his side and given instructions by the Mahaswamiji himself, in the niceties of Vedic Dharma, the grandeur of piety and love to Ishwara, the duties of a Sannyasin and incumbent of the Peetham. The old Guru spared the necessary time for it in the midst of his heavy duties. The young Swami who left his house and came away to the Math on the morning of the day he assumed sannyasa had no opportunity of again seeing his brother or his other relations for some time and it must be said that indeed he never thought of them again as his relations. He looked upon Sri Narasimha Bharati as not only his Guru but his father, mother, brother and God and made it his duty to act strictly in accordance with his wishes and strive to please him every minute of his life.

It is no exaggeration to say that the responsibilities undertaken by Sri Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji in the matter of protecting and educating his young disciple were no less arduous than those undertaken by Maharshi Vishwamitra in respect of Rama and Lakshmana when their father king Dasharatha being requested by the Maharishi sent them with him while they were yet extremely young.

The young Swami would rise at 6 o’clock every morning as commanded by the Mahaswamiji and having bathed, he would perform his ahnika ceremonies. He would then proceed to worship God Chandramoulishwara in the image presented to him by his Guru; and having prostrated before his Guru in accordance with the rules of sannyasa, he would take his first meal of the day at about 11 o’clock.

Even though he did not make any efforts to commit to memory the lessons of each day, yet he displayed a phenomenal capacity to repeat them perfectly well whenever called upon to do so, by the teacher. Two sargas of Raghuvamsha, two of Kumara-sambhava, and one Magha – in all, five sargas of Kavya together with four kandas of Champu-ramayana were studied by the Swami under Kunigal Shama Shastri. Before he had completed one or two sargas of Kavya, the Swami was able to read other works which were new to him; he posed his doubts which occurred to him in the course of his reading to the Shastri.

When Shama Shastri began to teach Naishada to the young Swami, the teacher informed Sri Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji of his high opinion regarding the intelligence and natural capacity of the young Swami and suggested that Lakshminarasimha Shastri might be appointed teacher in his stead.

The delight of Sri Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji and of Lakshminarasimha Shastri at hearing the progress of the young Swami knew no bounds. Lakshminarasimha Shastri began to teach the young Swami two or three sargas of Naishada and the Swami became fairly well-versed in literature when he was about eleven years old. In his twelfth year, he began to learn Tarka, which was the branch of learning that had descended in his family for generations from father to son and the one that was necessary for the mastery of every other Shastra. Three pupils from South India, who were intelligent and capable, were associated with the Swami in his lessons. As soon as the Swami had mastered Tarka-sangraha, Deepika and Muktavali, he was asked to teach these subjects one after the other to his fellow pupils who were less able. Soon he became very proficient in Tarka. As the Swami’s education had to be conducted during his itineration ever since he assumed sannyasa, uninterrupted study was not possible in his case and he had to spend a fairly long time over this one subject of study.

Sri Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji set out with his disciple from Mysore and went first to Nanjangud to visit God Srikantheswar. The old master’s love for his young pupil was palpable once when the young Swami fell ill, during a visit to the shrine of Srikantheswara of Nanjangud. The master intensely prayed for the recovery of his disciple, himself offered worship to the deity there and when the boy recovered in response, as the master believed, to his devout prayer, the master ordered a gold image of the young Swami’s likeness to be made and had it put-up in front of the Peetham of the Utsava-murti (the procession image) of the deity of the temple, as a sign that the boy was now entrusted to the care of a greater being than himself. The statuette is still to be seen on the silver pedestal in front of the processional image of Lord Srikantheshwara.

From Nanjangud, the Swami descended the ghats through Chamarajnagara and went into the Madras Presidency. After visiting Coimbatore, Salem, Tiruchy, Chittoor, Kadappa, Kurnool, Madras and other places, and having performed pilgrimages to the holy places in the vicinity, the Swamiji returned to Sringeri on Friday, the second day of the dark half of Ashada in the year Ishwara (1877 C.E).

The young Swami’s devotion and affection to the master were equally great. This can be seen from the fine hymns sung by him on several occasions. The following stanza, out of them, may serve as a specimen:

(O Narasimha, the pre-eminent Guru, what else is there to ask of you, who, out of your own volition, called me in my dream and placed your feet on my head with extreme compassion?)

the year Krodhana and after extensive tour returned to Sringeri in the year Ishwara, his tour lasted about twelve years and at the end of that tour, Sri Narasimha Bharati was eighty years old, while the young Swami was twenty.

At this time, Sri Chamarajendra Wodeyar, son of the Maharaja Krishnaraja Wodeyar III was a minor. The Maharani, Devajammanni of Sitavilas Sannidhana was one who fully understood the power of Sri Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji to initiate his pupils into religious truth, became desirous of obtaining for her son an interview with the Mahaswamiji and an initiation into Shiva-Panchakshari-Mantra. Aware that the Guru was already eighty years of age, she decided that no time was to be lost and communicated her wishes to the Mahaswamiji by letter.

The Mahaswamiji accepted the invitation extended to him by the Maharani of Mysore and reached the capital city with his disciple on Sunday, the second of the bright half of Phalguna of the year Bahudhanya 1879 C.E. Being received with great cordiality by the Maharani Devajammanni of Sita Vilas Sannidhana, he initiated Sri Chamarajendra Wodeyar into the mysteries of Shiva Panchakshari Mantra. In the course of conversation, he told Sri Chamarajendra Wodeyar that the mutual love and regard which had existed between himself and Sri Krishnaraja Wodeyar would continue in the relations between his young disciple and Sri Chamarajendra Wodeyar. A pearl necklace of great value was presented by the young Swami to Sri Chamarajendra Wodeyar on this occasion. After the presentation of Phala-Mantrakshata the Mahaswamiji took leave of the Maharaja and returned to Sringeri in great satisfaction.

The Guru initiated the young Swami into several mantras needed for the Upasana of the deities worshipped in the Peetham. Before the young Swami was twenty years old, he had received his initiation at the hands of his Guru into the mysteries of Srividya, Narasimha-mantra and Dakshinamurti-mantra as transmitted from Guru to disciple for generations in the Sringeri Math. He was also initiated into some of the most necessary portions of yoga and the methods of Nirguna-Samadhi. As has been already pointed out, the wonderful effects of the experiences of Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Narasimha Bharati Swamiji in his past births manifested themselves in several ways. After his initiation by his Guru, he became enamoured of yoga and was constantly reading works on that subject and making inquiries regarding it if any persons proficient in that art came to see him. These facts were known to the Guru who rejoiced in the progress of his pupil and encouraged him to some extent; but he was telling him from time to time that the time had not yet come for sitting down to the practice of yoga or the repetition of mantras, that he should cultivate the learning of Shastras as a form of worship of Saraswati and that the practice of yoga and the mantras would easily be acquired by him after the completion of his studies in the Shastras.

But whatever others may say and howsoever much one may think within oneself, the force of past experiences is indeed overwhelming. How can man fail to act in accordance with it? How can he oppose it? The young Swami became apathetic to the acquisition of learning and to worldly affairs. An intense desire seized him that he should wander forth alone into the wilderness and attain emancipation by the realization of jnana. He lost his cheerfulness and enthusiasm for work. He became indifferent to food and bodily wants and always appeared gloomy. Lakshminarasimha Shastri who came to learn the condition of the young Swami from his classmates attempted to ascertain the cause by questioning him on the subject. Then, the Swami who remembered how Sri Rama had responded under similar circumstances to his Guru, Vasishta, quoted the Lord’s very own words:

प्रात्कन्त वासनाजालं नियोजयति मां यथा ।
मुने तथवेत तिष्ठामि क्रुपण: कि करोम्यहम् ॥

(O Muni, I am a hapless person walking in the path set by the web of Vasanas (tendencies) of my previous births. What can I do?)

Lakshminarasimha Shastri narrated anecdotes and experiences from the Vedas and from daily life and prayed that the impulses of Vairagya which had come to the young Swami so early in life should be stemmed. But though Lakshminarasimha Shastri was held by the young Swami in high regard, it proved to be of no avail in the present situation.
The whole situation was then brought to the notice of the Guru who came to the decision that it was necessary to counteract the mental tendencies of the young Swami. He sent for him and questioned him in private regarding his intentions. The aged Mahaswamiji had become hard of hearing and it was not possible for anyone to carry on long conversations with him by word of mouth. Knowing this, the young Swami made known to him in writing, his desire to retire into a forest for the purpose of meditation. First, the young Swami would write out all that he had to say and the Guru would read it and reply by word of mouth. Then, again, the disciple would try to meet the objections raised by his Guru and put his own views and arguments in writing to which the Guru would again reply by word of mouth and so on. In this manner, the discussion went on.

It was not possible to overcome the arguments and explanations offered by the young Swami or to defeat him from his purpose by means of more cogent or weighty reasoning. It was, however, necessary that he should be made to change his mind. The aged Guru therefore overcame him by saying that any attempts that he might make contrary to the wish of his Guru would be of no avail. He consoled him, at the same time, saying that in course of time, he would grow up into a great yogi like Sadashivendra though that may not be in his Guru’s own time. In this manner, he succeeded in weaning the young Swami from his intentions, telling him that Sringeri was a place eminently suitable for a life of solitude, \textit{jnana} and \textit{tapas}, that there were vast and beautiful forests close by and that he might engage himself in yoga at Sringeri when the time is ripe for it.

This circumstance is mentioned in one of the stanzas of Sharada-shatashloki-stava composed many years later by Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji.

आज्ञासीद्वैरवियोगः देहानुशासनातः शारदायम्बा
सार्वाक्षं योगमारुतुपदिश्चतिं भवानीरसं: सूतुश्चयः।

(My Guru’s authoritative utterance to me was, “Your mother Sharada, the ocean of mercy, will definitely instruct you soon about yoga, which has eight limbs. You are Her own child.”)

आशावस्क: सदात्मन्यविरतत्त्वाद्यस्यस्यक्षसवानुरुगः।
काये चक्षुस्वरूपेन्युनितमितमत: कापि कर्मितं कालः।
शोभायाचण्डक्षेत्रो शंकितपिन्ने कापि रेवात्ते वा
गजातीरऽथ तुझातत्तमुवि च कदा स्वेतचारी भवे यमः॥

(When shall I become a wanderer at will on mountain peaks or in the depths of the forests, on sandy banks or on the banks of rivers like the Narmada, the Ganga or the Tunga, with the four directions of the empty space for my only clothing, never for a moment dissociated from the Self, abandoning all attachments and never identifying myself with the body or the senses?)

The young Swami was satisfied with the words of assurance from His Guru and the gloom in his mind left him. Sri Narasimha Bharati completed the education of the young Swami by having him instructed in the Prasthanatraya (The Upanishads, the Bhagavad-gita and the Brahma-sutras) with the Bhashyas; it is learnt that he personally taught the young Swami the Sutra-Bhashya. He also got him to perform Bhashya-Shanti once again after their return to Sringeri. Sri Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji was now about 82 years of age. His body had become emaciated through old age.

The worship of Sri Chandramoulishwara, the hoary linga transmitted from Sri Shankaracharya, which he had performed without a break all his life time had to be delegated to his disciple; but his desire to go for a pilgrimage to Gokarna never left him. His extreme old age and his bodily condition made everyone shrink from fulfilling his wish. As the Mahaswamiji was constantly meditating on Gokarna and Mahabaleshwara, a wonderful thing happened which would appear to show that God enabled him to gratify his wishes. On the day previous to his leaving the mortal coil, while the Mahaswamiji was sleeping, he began to speak aloud so that all who were near him heard him. It might be said that he was speaking in a dream. The Mahaswamiji first said, “Brahmins from Gokarna have come to take me with them. Let the palanquin be got ready,” and then after two or three minutes, “Is the palanquin ready? Let me be seated on it.” About an hour after this he again spoke and said, “How wonderful! They have taken me to Gokarna and brought me back so soon! Our palanquin bearers are very capable fellows. Let them be rewarded.” After this, the Mahaswamiji never spoke. It was Friday morning, about 9 o’clock, the second bright half of Jyeshta of the year Pramadi (1879 C.E) when the master cast off his mortal coil and attained Videha-Mukti.

The Mahaswamiji had adorned the throne of transcendental wisdom for a long period of sixty two years; he himself was eighty two years old. He had found the fortunes of the Math at low ebb when he took charge; he was, himself new and inexperienced, barely twenty years of age, when he was faced with a very onerous responsibility; his own education and training had been imperfect; but he had an exceptionally strong will and conquered all difficulties. He had become a great scholar; he had acquired great yogic powers; he found an impoverished Math when he took charge and left it in a flourishing condition. The disciple Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Narasimha Bharati Swamiji was twenty two years old when the Guru cast off his mortal coil.
3. First Years of Incumbency

The young Swamiji’s sorrow knew no bounds when the Guru cast off his mortal coil; the Guru had adopted the young Swamiji while he was still in his boyhood and, for thirteen years, had made him his constant companion and had brought him up with great affection. It was not possible for the young Swamiji to console himself or for others to console him. All the rites and ceremonies connected with the interment of the body of the Guru were performed strictly in the manner prescribed in the scriptures and in accordance with established custom. By the time they were completed, it was midnight. The young Swamiji did not partake of any food and sleep forsook him. He was again and again speaking of his great Guru and his attributes, recollecting his great love and graciousness towards the Guru and lamenting his loss. While the Swamiji was in this condition, he felt exhausted and a bit drowsy. It seemed to him that he was in the presence of the great Guru who asked him, “What is it you are doing? Giving up food and water! I am not gone – I am here.” The Swamiji opened his eyes but saw nothing. He then recollected some words that his Guru had said to him while he was still in the body: “Separation from me will be unendurable to you. I am now conscribed as it were by this body. After giving up this body, I will be all-pervasive. This alone will be the difference; nothing else.” Swamiji recalled these words, derived great consolation from them and overcame his sorrow.

The shedding of the mortal coil of the great Guru was communicated by means of Srimukha (a communiqué from the Math) to his disciples all over the country and, among others, to Gopala Shastri, the representative of the Sringeri Math and the worshipper of the temple at Gokarna. When the Srimukha reached him, he was greatly astonished. The reason for his astonishment lay in this: On the day previous to the demise of the old Mahaswamiji, he had dreamt that he was in the temple at Gokarna, that Sri Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji had arrived there in a palanquin, and that while he stood there after performing Namaskara (salutation) to the Mahaswamiji, the latter inquired about his welfare and went close to the image of Mahabaleshwara, worshipped the image and performed nirajana (waving of lit camphor) before the deity. Gopala Shastri himself came to Sringeri and acquainted Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Narasimha Bharati Swamiji with these details. The Swamiji and the others marveled much at the greatness of the Guru who had passed away and came to the conclusion that to fulfill the devout wish of the Mahaswamiji, Ishwara Himself had taken him in spirit to Gokarna and permitted him to behold the deity.

The new Mahaswamiji’s (Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji) installation ceremony was celebrated in accordance with the wishes of the people of Sringeri on Friday, the eighth of the bright half of Ashada of the year Pramadi (27th June 1879).

For a period of six years from the day on which his Guru shed his mortal coil, not a day passed on which the Mahaswamiji did not worship at his Guru’s Adhishtanam (shrine) with full faith and devotion. He made up his mind that he would not undertake any task in connection with the Math or any observance necessary for his salvation without going to his master’s Adhishtanam and worshipping him and obtaining his assent; and he stuck to his determination. The Mahaswamiji thus passed his days in Sringeri, performing the duties appropriate to his Ashrama (stage of life) worshipping his Guru and Chandramoulishwara, instructing his pupils in Tarka and Vedanta and adding to his own learning by further study. Needless to mention, he held the worship of his Guru to be equivalent to the worship of all the Gods.

It has already been stated that Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji was, from his boyhood, bent on acquiring proficiency in Yoga. Yoga can be broadly classified under the heads Hathayoga and Rajayoga. In the former, the emphasis is on the control of the body and the breath to gain restraint of the mind, while the latter is characterized by the practice of concentration culminating in the thorough restraint of the mind. Hathayoga leads to Rajayoga. Restraint of the mind, which characterizes Yoga, enables one to engage in Jnanabhyasa
(the practice of knowledge) culminating in the realization of oneself as non-different from the Supreme Brahman. Such direct realization of the Truth liberates one from Samsara, the cycle of births and deaths. The Mahaswamiji mastered Yoga-asanas, special bodily postures, prescribed in the Yoga texts and engaged, in the course of his mastery of Hathayoga, in the practice of Pranayama.

Pranayama has three components: Pooraka, inhalation of breath, Kumbhaka, retention of breath after inhalation or remaining without breathing after complete exhalation and Rechaka, complete exhalation of breath. It is said that as one masters the control of breath one would encounter an outburst of profuse perspiration, then the experience of bodily tremors and then elevation. The Agent of the Math, Sri Srikanta Shastri, was fortunate to witness such observable features of Pranayama when the Mahaswamiji was engaged in Pranayama. The aim of Pranayama is the mastery over the mind and perspiration, etc., are just its associated external aspects.

In the texts of Hathayoga, there is a description of the ‘Khechari-Mudra’ and this is eulogized. Through Chedana (the cutting of the base of the tongue little by little), Calana (the shaking of the tongue sideways by holding it with the fingers) and Dohana (stretching the tongue like the udder of a cow when milking the cow), the tongue should be made long. Then the tongue should be thrust upwards through the opening of the back of the throat and should be kept at the level of the eyebrow. This is said to mark the Khechari-Mudra and this Mudra is said to result in the descent of ambrosia from the Sahasrara-Chakra, the yogic centre in the head. The Mahaswamiji wished to practise the Khechari-Mudra. This is also known as Lambika-yoga. Sri Vidya Tirtha, the 10th Jagadguru of Sri Sringeri Sharada Peetham is reputed to have thoroughly mastered lambika-yoga.

A bairagi from North India named Ganga Das arrived at Sringeri. When the Mahaswamiji ascertained that Ganga Das was proficient in Hathayoga and knowledgeable about the Khechari-Mudra, he arranged for the latter to stay for some time at Sringeri, had discussion about Yoga with him and personally initiated the practice of Khechari-Mudra by observing dietary restrictions like giving up salt and pungent items and resorting to Chedana, Calana and Dohana. He gradually progressed to duly thrusting his tongue upwards through the opening at the back of the throat. However, not being enamoured of the Khechari-Mudra, he finally discarded it and moved on, from Hathayoga, to Rajayoga, which He mastered. The eight limbs of Raja-yoga are: Yama or restraints (non-injury to all beings, truthfulness, abstinence from theft, thorough continence and non-acceptance of any means of enjoyment in excess of what is needed for life), Niyamas or observances (purity, contentment, austerity, study and dedication to God), Asanas (specified bodily postures), Pranayama (the control of breath), Pratyahara (the withdrawal of the senses from their objects), Dharana (the fixation of the mind on a locus), Dhyana (the one-pointed flow of thoughts towards the object of focus), and Samadhi (absorption on the object of focus). The Mahaswamiji mastered Samadhi for Self-realization.

Six years of quiet, secluded life thus went by, a period of studying and teaching, of spiritual communion in his Guru’s shrine and yogic practices. By constant study of books and discussion of religious and philosophical questions and lectures to the advanced students who came to him for instruction, his knowledge of the Shastras had become unrivalled; possessed of a mighty intellect, exceptionally combined with child-like simplicity and sweetness of temper, trained and moulded into shape by two master-minds such as his elder brother and the advanced yogi, his own Guru, it is no wonder that in the six years of secluded study, contemplation and literary discussion, he grew into a fascinating specimen of human excellence.

In the year Parthiva (December, 1885 C.E) the Mahaswamiji was informed that Sri Chamarajendra Wodeyar, the youthful Maharaja of Mysore would be pleased to pay a visit to Sringeri and have the Guru’s Darshan. He was the first Maharaja of Mysore to visit Sringeri. The Mahaswamiji made all necessary arrangements through his agents and received His Highness who had arrived along with his Dewan K. Seshadri Iyer, the British Resident Mr. Girdlestone and their retinue; all of them arrived at Sringeri on Monday, the full moon day of Margasirsha in the year Parthiva (7th December 1885) and remained at Sringeri for two days. The Mahaswamiji knew that it was the intention of his Guru, Sri Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji to confer some conspicuous honour on the Maharaja of Mysore and felt that the time had come to fulfill his Guru’s wishes.

On this occasion, the Mahaswamiji presented the Maharaja with a crown set with precious stones. Then the Mahaswamiji said, “The crown has been with the Gurus who have come in an unbroken succession from Sri Vidyaranya, the 12th Jagadguru of the Sringeri Sharada Peetham who established the throne of the Maharajas of Mysore in Vijayanagara (Anegondi) which was later transferred to Mysore. It was therefore appropriate that the throne and the crown should both together be in the enjoyment of the rulers who represented the Karnataka empire. My Guru had indeed wished to honour the Maharaja with the crown and now has come the opportunity for giving effect to it; the great yogi’s Sankalpa can never go unfulfilled.” Saying these words, the Mahaswamiji himself placed the crown on the head of the young ruler with his blessings. The crown gifted by the Mahaswamiji is now kept as one of the objects of worship in the palace of Mysore.

Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji possessed great learning. Self-realization and the courage of it appeared personified in him. About this time, by the inspiration of Sri Sharadamba, it occurred to him that he should set out on a tour for the purpose of fulfilling his duty of spreading righteousness through the land in accordance with the injunctions of his Guru. A well-known and highly respected Jagirdar of Western India by name Annasaheb Vinchookar was then on a visit to the Mahaswamiji at Sringeri. He begged the Mahaswamiji to visit Northern India and offered to accompany him and see that all necessary arrangements were made for the tour. He submitted to the Mahaswamiji that thousands of Mahaswamiji’s disciples were longing to behold him. This request on the part of the Jagirdar helped to strengthen the Mahaswamiji’s desire to travel in Northern India.

In accordance with the usual custom, he prayed for permission to set out on his travel both to his Guru and to Sri Sharadamba and from both he received tokens of assent. The Mahaswamiji was unwilling to interrupt the worship of his own great Guru which he had daily carried on at the Guru’s Adhishthanam (temple) without a break for six years and was still hesitating. Such being the case, on a certain day, when the Mahaswamiji went to the Guru’s Adhishthanam to worship as usual, he saw a small bana-linga placed on the pani-peetham of the linga embedded in the Adhishthanam. Inquiries were made as to how the bana-linga came there but no one knew. When the Mahaswamiji saw the bana-linga, he was greatly pleased. It seemed to him that knowing the reason of his hesitation to set out travelling, his own great Guru had sent the bana-linga as a token to be taken with the Mahaswamiji on his tours and worshipped daily. Until the day of setting out on his travels, the Mahaswamiji kept the bana-linga on the Adhishthanam and worshipped it.

Satisfied with the signs he got from his Guru in favour of the tour, the Mahaswamiji decided to visit Northern India. The golden palanquin presented by Sri Krishnaraja Wodeyar III in the year Ananda was somewhat damaged. It was sent to Mysore and thoroughly refurbished. All preparations for the tour were completed. On Friday, the fifth of the bright half of Margasirsha in the year Parthiva, S.S. 1809 (1886 C.E) the Mahaswamiji left Sringeri with his followers taking with him the idols of Sri Chandramoulishwara and Ratnagarbha Ganapati which have been handed down to the succeeding Acharyas for generations, as well as the newly acquired bana-linga and proceeded to Sacchidanandapura, a village close to Sringeri.
4. First Independent Tour

Having toured in the districts of Kadur and Shimoga in the Mysore state for eleven months, the Mahaswamiji desired, before going to Western India, to perform the pilgrimage of Gokarna which had been the wish of his Guru’s heart even during his last moments. He entered the district of North Canara, having passed through Banavasi and Sirsi. He reached Gokarna at 8 o’clock on the morning of Sunday, the fifth of the dark half of Magha in the year Vyaya, S.S 1810 (1887 C.E.) and after being taken in procession through the tour, he visited the temple of Lord Sri Mahabaleshwara and was lodged in the branch Math of the Peetham. Gokarna is on the west coast. Here the linga of Mahabaleshwara faces west; the place is held in great esteem as stated in the Puranas. Hindus of all sects from all parts of India come in large numbers to visit the place.

Local tradition states that the linga was granted to Ravana by Lord Paramashiva, when he was practising severe penance on Mount Kailasa, that on his way to Lanka he had to stop for a time near this spot for purposes of ablutions, that on looking out for a person to keep the linga safe during his ablutions, a short Brahmin appeared before him, who agreed to keep it safe for a few minutes, on the understanding that he would call thrice before he left and would go away leaving it on the ground if he did not respond to the call. Ravana, it is said, agreed to the condition. While he was engaged in ablutions, the man (It is said that he is none other than Lord Ganapati) called thrice and as Ravana could not come at once, he left the linga on the ground and went his way. After that Ravana did his best to lift the linga but failed, and recognizing the will of Ishwara, worshipped the linga where it stood and went his way.

The Mahaswamiji stopped at Gokarna for two months, in the earlier part of which occurred the festival of Shivaratri. In the shrine at Gokarna, the linga can be worshipped by all Hindus. Ordinarily, some two or three hundred thousand people assemble here every year on the day of Shivaratri. As the Mahaswamiji arrived at Gokarna in time for Shivaratri, the number of pilgrims during his visit was double the usual number. How difficult it must have been for everyone to go into the temple and worship the deity in these circumstances! As the Mahaswamiji was held in great reverence, the people cheerfully gave way to the Mahaswamiji to proceed to the temple and exclusively worship the deity for long; the temple authorities extended their cooperation. The Mahaswamiji entered the temple in the third yama or at midnight and worshipped the deity for three hours with intense devotion, offered his valuable gifts of a diamond necklace with fine strings of pearls and a necklace of Rudraksha besides costly clothes. On the occasion the Mahaswamiji composed a special Stotram on Lord Mahabaleshwara and returned to the Math after having blessed the innumerable devotees. While he was at Gokarna, the Mahaswamiji became afflicted by a urinary disease and his illness gave cause for anxiety; but just as in the case of Sri Shankara Bhagavatpada, for whom after the completion of the sixteen years of life vouchsafed to him by Ishwara, Vyasa Maharshi appeared before him and granted him an extension of another sixteen years of lifetime to vanquish various anti-Vedic cults and to reestablish Adhyatmavidya (wisdom of the Atman), even so, as there were many important duties to be fulfilled by Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji, the illness of this illustrious Guru subsided by the grace of Sri Mahabaleshwara.

The Mahaswamiji remained in the sacred place of Gokarna for two months; during this period, the disciples had the privilege of listening to the Mahaswamiji's sagacious clarifications on a variety of knotty questions concerning Varnashrama-Dharma. From Gokarna, the Mahaswamiji proceeded North and travelled into the Bombay presidency, passing through the district of Dharwar.

At that time, the Raja of Jamkhandi was Ramachandra Rao Appasaheb, a direct descendant of the famous Parashuram Bhau of the Peshwa days. He was accomplished, capable and courageous and he had raised his little State to a condition of great prosperity by his skillful administration and had proved himself a wise administrator. As his activities, right from his boyhood, were mainly worldly, his faith and devotion in matters spiritual were very limited. However, he had belief in the existence of God. In proof of this, it may be stated that he had built a beautiful temple made of marble in his State and had dedicated it to the Goddess Tripurasundari and he had also made necessary arrangements for Her daily worship as well as for a grand procession during Dasara. Appasaheb learnt that Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji, the Jagadguru of Sringeri, had come in the course of his travels close to his territory and that he was a great Guru. Under ordinary circumstances, the Chief would have felt no attraction towards an ascetic; but as the result of the good deeds done by him in his past births, he felt drawn towards the Mahaswamiji by an inexplicable love and devotion and he became desirous to behold him.

When the Mahaswamiji was at some distance from Jamkhandi, Appasaheb sent his agents to the Mahaswamiji with a request to the Mahaswamiji to grace his capital city with his presence. The Mahaswamiji learnt through the Raja’s agents and others, the past and present mental state of Appasaheb and that his want of faith in the past was due to the absence of proper influences for bringing about a change. He saw that it was his duty to enter the territories of the Raja and give him an opportunity for developing his faith. He, therefore, sent a reply through the Chief’s agents accepting the invitation. The Raja was extremely happy to receive a favourable reply from the Mahaswamiji. He made suitable arrangements to receive the Mahaswamiji in keeping with the Guru’s greatness and his exalted rank. He had a pandal erected near a lake called Kattegiri about a mile and half from Jamkhandi to receive the Mahaswamiji and beheld him for the first time.

No sooner had the Mahaswamiji inquired of the Raja’s welfare with his smiling countenance than the Raja lost for a time, all consciousness of the things around him. His joy knew no bounds. The hairs of his body stood on end. Tears began to flow profusely from his eyes. His voice became choked. Needless to say, the Raja had undergone a transformation. At 8 o’clock in the morning of the 16th of September, 1887, the Mahaswamiji entered Jamkhandi, accompanied by the regalia of the Sringeri Math and the Jamkhandi State and encamped on the beautiful and holy place known as Ramatirtha. The Raja’s respect and devotion to the Mahaswamiji had grown considerably even in that short period. He entertained the Guru as his respected guest for some days in his capital city and submitted to him a beautiful diamond necklace of exquisite European design costing about Rs.12,000/- and bearing on the obverse of its central pendant, an engraving of Dagi Saheb, his own adopted son. He prayed to be allowed to defray every year all the expenses incurred in Sringeri on the day of Moola-Nakshatra during Dasara and to send his own agents to Sringeri every year to pay the annual contribution from his State. He subsequently made the offer in writing and from that day to this, the promise has been fulfilled every year without a break. In these and other ways, he served the Mahaswamiji with great zeal and earned his love and regard. He received valuable advice for his guidance as well as Mantropadesha at the hands of the Mahaswamiji and became one of his most prominent disciples.

It may be mentioned here that when the Mahaswamiji was in Bellary on his way back to Sringeri, Ramachandra Rao Appasaheb once again visited him and after obtaining initiation for his son at the hands of the Mahaswamiji, returned to his State. And again after the Mahaswamiji had returned to Sringeri, he came there with all his retinue, enjoyed the hospitality extended to him by the Mahaswamiji, offered a tribute of gold coins to the Mahaswamiji and made a gift of a beautiful silver throne to the Mahaswamiji. He showed his reverence for the Mahaswamiji by requesting him to place his foot on the back of his little son before ascending to take his seat on the chair placed before the image of Sri Sharada. The Mahaswamiji was greatly touched by the devotion shown to him by the Raja, accepted the gift of the silver throne and permitted him to return to his State after treating him and his equally devoted son with royal honours.

After Jamkhandi, the Mahaswamiji visited the native states of Miraj, Sangli, Kurundwad as well as other smaller States at the request of the Rajas concerned and having conferred his blessings on them and their people, he entered Kolhapur. The Raja of Kolhapur was yet a minor. The Mahaswamiji was received with great hospitality by the Maharani of Kolhapur and visited the temple of Goddess Mahalakshmi. There is a well known Math named Sankeshwara Math in Kolhapur, which is regarded as a branch of the Sringeri Math, and the people of Kolhapur, worshipped the Swamiji of this Math and held him in great honour. The Rajas of Kolhapur have granted some inam villages to support this Math. When the Jagadguru visited Kolhapur, the head of the said Math paid obeisance to him and respectfully invited him to visit his premises. The Jagadguru accepted his sincere invitation. Having learnt that the people of Kolhapur, both Vaidikas and Laukikas, were well-read in Sanskrit and capable of conversing in that language, the Jagadguru was greatly pleased. During his stay in that place, he gave lectures regarding Dharma and conducted discourses in matters of Shastra in Sanskrit itself; needless to say, his disciples were greatly pleased. In the course of this tour, the Mahaswamiji went very near to Pune. The Mahaswamiji was gratified at the love and regard shown to him in these places.

The Mahaswamiji decided to return to Sringeri and on the way back, had to stop at Bellary. Bellary is a fairly large town of the Madras presidency. Hearing that the Jagadguru was in their district, many people of Bellary begged that he should visit their city and bless them. This devout request was one that could not be ignored and so, the Mahaswamiji decided to visit Bellary. For some thirty years before this, communal tension had been brewing here. Some people of Bellary petitioned the British local authorities that the Mahaswamiji should not enter the town on a palanquin with all his paraphernalia. The Collector of the district looked into the connected old records and found that precedent had established the Mahaswamiji's right to enter the town. A riot was apprehended; but the authorities made the necessary security arrangements and the procession passed without a hitch. The fact was that, a person had only to see the Mahaswamiji and all his prejudices vanished at once. His genial smile characterized by an indescribable charm of expression won the hearts of all beholders, whether they were believers or otherwise. If a mere Darshan of the Jagadguru could do so much, what needs to be said of the privilege of hearing his sweet, simple, yet edifying flow of words, or of the rarer privilege of having a private audience with him?

The Mahaswamiji performed his Chaturmasya-Sankalpa in Bellary and remained there for two months. His disciples in that place took upon themselves the whole of the Math expenses during that period and served him with great devotion. It has already been said that the Raja of Jamkhandi visited the Mahaswamiji here. Another distinguished visitor was the late Rajyadhurandhara Sri K. Seshadri Iyer, the illustrious Dewan of Mysore who looked upon the Jagadguru as an incarnation of God. Sri Sheshadri Iyer came to Bellary and underwent Bhashya-Shanti at the hands of the Guru and received his blessings.

A short account of Sri K. Sheshadri Iyer’s career cannot be held to be out of place in this connection. He was born at Palghat in the Madras Presidency of poor parents. With the help of his elder brother, he received English education and had a distinguished educational career. Helped by Mr. C.
Rangacharlu, Dewan of Mysore, who was a farsighted statesman and had marked him out for a great career, he entered the Mysore Service and held the office of Dewan for eighteen years and became famous. His associations, training and occupation were such that he was merged in worldly affairs and had no time for thinking of spiritual matters; but as the effect of his experiences in past births, he was led almost against his will to spiritual contemplation in accordance with the words of Bhagawan Sri Krishna, “By that very practice of a past life, he who has fallen from Yoga is carried forward even in spite of himself.”

This happened when he accompanied His Highness Sri Chamarajendra Wodeyar to Sringeri in 1885. On that occasion, when he first caught sight of the Mahaswamiji, a veil that covered his mind was rent, his undesirable experiences of the past crumbled away and a light suddenly dawned upon him. The desire came upon him that he should bathe in the River Tunga, that he should smear the sacred ashes on his forehead in accordance with ancient practice and that he should perform his Sandhyavandana by the riverside; and he at once did it. He sought a private interview with the Mahaswamiji, and informed him of the change that had been brought in him. The Mahaswamiji was pleased and encouraged him in his aspirations, removed some doubts that had arisen in his mind by means of rational and Shastraic arguments and illustrations from daily life and brought him to believe in the Vedas and the Shastras, in right conduct and right living.
From that day till the day of his death, the love and devotion of K. Sheshadri Iyer towards the Mahaswamiji was exemplary. He was initiated into several mantras by Mahaswamiji. He also learnt some of the principal methods of Yoga and made fair progress in it. He visited the Mahaswamiji often, was numbered among his most cherished disciples, learnt from him the methods of contemplating Nirguna-Brahman and endeavoured to secure supreme happiness; but as he was occupied with worldly affairs he was unable to perfect himself in spiritual training. It was his earnest desire to spend some years after his retirement at the feet of his Guru to complete his spiritual education but that ambition was not fulfilled owing to his sudden death.

The public never knew the attachment that existed between this Guru and disciple. It might have seemed to superficial observers that the Mahaswamiji loved his pupil for self-interest and that the disciple loved his Mahaswamiji from sectarian sympathy. But neither of these distinguished personages was actuated by motives of power, wealth or common-place ambitions. The real cause of attachment that existed between the Mahaswamiji and the Dewan was the love and regard that sprang up between them from many a discussion that they carried on with regard to spiritual matters. The fame of Seshadri Iyer as a capable and remarkable administrator was established both at home and abroad. His spiritual greatness was no less extraordinary.
Leaving Bellary, the Mahaswamiji encamped at a village called Belaguppe in the taluk of Rayadurga. Two adjacent, small mud-roofed houses had been reserved for the Mahaswamiji. One of these houses was for the worship of Chandramoulishwara and for the Mahaswamiji’s Bhiksha and the other for the Mahaswamiji’s religious duties and to serve as a place to rest. Tragedy struck on the night Mahaswamiji reached this place; thieves broke in and ran away with the costly items on which they could lay their hands. The box containing Ratnagarbha Ganapati and Chandramoulishwara-linga was also found missing.

When the Mahaswamiji was informed, he did not utter a single word. He rose, bathed and, wearing wet clothes, sat down in meditation, mentally repeating the Lakshmi-Narasimha-Mantra. Even as he remained in meditation, horsemen scoured the country for traces of the stolen things. The British authorities were informed and they assigned an Inspector of police noted for his detective ability to do the needful. The Mahaswamiji continued to fast and meditate in seclusion even as the days passed. On the fifth day after the theft, word came from the Inspector. That the copper cabinet used to keep the Chandramoulishwara-linga and Ratnagarbha-Ganapati had been found buried underground by a peasant ploughing the field. Thus the force of the Mahaswamiji’s spirituality and devotion, and the efforts of the Police Inspector resulted in the valuable items being got back. On that day, the Mahaswamiji specially blessed the Inspector, bathed at 7 o’clock in the evening and an intense puja that lasted all through the night and was completed only at 6 o’clock on the next morning.

It is well-known that the Chandramoulishwara-linga and the Ratnagarbha-Ganapati of the Sringeri Math were both worshipped by the great Sri Shankara Bhagavatpada and that they were handed over by him to his direct disciple Sureshwaracharyya who was appointed as the head of the Dakshinamnaya Peetham and that from that day to this, they have been worshipped by all the Gurus of the Math in succession. It is stated in the Puranas that when Sri Shankaracharya was in Benares, God Vishweshwara appeared before him and presented him with five lingas brought from Kailas for his worship. Sri Shankaracharya worshipped these five Lingas and then gave one each to the four Amnaya-Peethams established by him for the spread of righteousness and gave the remaining one for worship at Chidambaram in the Madras presidency.

The Mahaswamiji travelled post-haste and reached Sringeri on Wednesday the thirteenth of the bright half of Magha of the year Sarvadhari S.S. 1812 (13th February, 1889). The first thing he did on his return to Sringeri was to place the Chandramoulishwara-linga and Ratnagarbha-Ganapati idol before the altar of his master's shrine and receive them back with his unseen blessings. The first tour of the Mahaswamiji had lasted about three years; he was now thirty-one years old.
5. Second tour of the Mahaswamiji

For two years after this, the Mahaswamiji stayed at Sringeri, studying the sacred scriptures and teaching disciples who came to him for instruction in Vedanta and worshipping daily his own Guru and Sri Chandramoulishwara. It was a quiet life divided between self-improvement and instruction, after the time required for meditation and Puja. It was a life after his own heart. But his mission was not to do what was most congenial to his temperament, but to go about preaching the truths of Vedic-Dharma to the vast multitude of people who owed allegiance to the Math. So he resolved once again to go on a tour to those parts of South India which he had visited with his Guru when he was quite young and all preparations were made for the purpose of carrying out this tour.

In accordance with the usual practice, the proposed tour was intimated to His Highness, Sri Chamarajendra Wodeyar. By the blessings and the grace of the Guru and Sri Chamundeshwari, the patron Goddess of the royal family, His Highness, the Maharaja, had been blessed with children and the royal family was a happy sight to see like the Gokula of Nanda. The Maharaja was anxious that the Mahaswamiji should see with his own eyes the happiness in the royal family and give his blessings. It is at this point in time that the Maharaja received with great pleasure, the communication from the Math regarding the Guru’s tour. He replied stating that it would give him utmost pleasure if the Guru would be pleased to perform Vyasa-Puja and Chaturmasya-Sankalpa for that year in Mysore and give his blessings to His Highness and the royal family before setting out on his further tours. The Maharaja also added that the Dewan had been requested to render all such help as was required from the Mysore government and to arrange for all such assistance as may be required from the British Government in British territories.

On Friday, the fifth of the dark half of Jyeshtha, in the year Khara S.S. 1814 (1891 C.E), the Mahaswamiji left Sringeri with his retinue and proceeded to Kigga, the ancient hermitage of Rishyashringa Maharshi and encamped in that place. The next morning, after performing the worship of Rishyashringeshwara and receiving His blessings, he left Kigga and travelling through Chickmaglur, Belur and Hassan, he reached Mysore on Friday, the second of the bright half of Ashada. The Maharaja received the Guru with all honours in accordance with the established custom and after performing the Dhuli-Pada-Puja, presented his children to the Mahaswamiji and obtained his blessings. The Mahaswamiji was filled with joy at beholding the love and devotion of the Maharaja and the happy royal family and said to the Maharaja – “By the blessings of our great Guru, your Highness has now attained complete living; for it is stated in the Vedas, “through children a man’s life becomes complete”. He then blessed the Maharaja and, leaving the palace, proceeded to encamp in the chatram (guest house) of Nanjaraya Bahadur which had been reserved for his accommodation. Here, he performed the Chaturmasya-Sankalpa and Vyasa-Puja as well as the worship of Sri Sharada and participated in other festivities of Dasara season. All the expenses of the Chaturmasya during the two months it lasted were borne by the palace. During the remaining two months of the stay of the Mahaswamiji, the expenses were borne by other disciples. In this manner, the Guru remained in Mysore for a period of four months and thanks to the charitable distribution of food for all classes of people during these months, the drought and famine which threatened the country at that time were fortunately averted.

Mysore is one of the principal seats of Vedic learning. After the patronage of the court of Peshwa Baji Rao II was lost, the great pundits of that court found their way to the court of Maharaja Krishnaraja Wodeyar III, and being welcomed by that Maharaja, stayed there permanently. At the time of the Mahaswamiji’s visit to Mysore in the year Khara (1891 C.E), there were Pundits and learned men of the court, who possessed profound knowledge of Tarka, Vyakarana, Veda and Vedanta of the likes of Panditaratna Sitarama Shastri, Panditaratna Kasturirangacharya, Dharmadhikari Rama Shastri, Dharmadhikari Kumbhakonam Sheshacharya, Sundara Shastri of Pazhamaneri in Tanjore District, Tamugondlu Samacharya, Vibhagam Srikantha Shastri, Narasimha Ganapathi, Dwivedi Subbavadhani and others. A Sanskrit College had been established by the Maharaja and many of the Pundits referred to above were engaged in teaching Vedas and Shastras to their pupils. His Highness Maharaja Krishna Raja Wodeyar IV, the ruler of the State, was firmly imbued with belief in the Vedas and the Shastras. Very much more money was spent than ever before in the cause of Sanskrit learning and the maintenance of learned men.

The learning of these days is not a hundredth or a thousandth part compared with the learning of bygone days either in extent or in depth. Is this the effect of the time sprit? Or is it the will of Ishwara? The time has come where one hesitates to speak of Vedic learning as any learning at all. Even those who have learnt the Vedas and Shastras and have become pundits are forced to regret their folly in having devoted all their lives to such unprofitable learning. They now desire that their children should not follow their example and devote themselves to profitless Vedic learning. The contentment that was in the blood of the Brahmins seems to have fled. From head to foot men are filled with the spirit of restless desire and its mischievous activities. The power of the mantras to exorcise that evil spirit seems to have become blunted.

All this must be ascribed to the evil effects of past births by which the present generation is condemned to endure the manifold miseries caused by the tendencies of the present day and to no other cause. Everyone young or old is imbued with a feeling of egotism that he or she is the only wise being in the world, the only one possessing a subtle intellect and capable of exercising the faculty of reasoning and the only savior of the world! We have discarded the ancients who were contented and farseeing men of pure lives, free from all egotism. The Vedas and the Shastras that once occupied an exalted place have been set aside for the use of brainless people. A doubt however arises in the minds of some as to whether the decision of the present day was made after careful enquiry with such intelligence as God has given us or whether it is the result of thoughtlessness and folly.

The philosophy of the modern educated Indians seem to be as follows: - “In the search for happiness the one desire of all mankind, the one and only indispensible means is money. As stated in a verse penned by the famous poet Bhartruhari, “Whoso possesses wealth is the man; he is of noble birth, learned wise and virtuous. He only is eloquent and worthy to be seen. All virtues follow wealth.”

But does this philosophy stand to reason? Is it possible to meet the objections that can be raised against it and to establish the truth of this theory? It is necessary to determine first the meaning of happiness which is sought after and desired by all. For the attainment of happiness determined by this inquiry is wealth, the sole and sufficient means or are there other and more necessary conditions?
Happiness and misery are mental conditions and have no hard and fast material basis; nor are they the same in outward form for all human beings. Real happiness persists through all time – past, present and future -- and is independent of external conditions. Real learning is that which teaches us the means of acquiring such happiness. If we cultivate that learning, the happiness that has deserted us will seek us once more. The evil spirit of desire that has taken possession of us will flee away. We shall then obtain freedom. The human life that has been vouchsafed to us will then be justified. Modern learning, its endeavors and its practices can never be the means for the acquisition of happiness that is truly desirable. There can be no doubt that we have mistaken misery for happiness and are in a state of delusion, and that being unable to see the end of it owing to our confused state of mind, we are engaged in complaints, lamentations and restless activities. Have those which have made their best efforts for the acquisition of wealth reaped benefits and enjoyed happiness commensurate with their efforts? Are those who have accumulated vast wealth satisfied and enjoying happiness unalloyed with misery?

The things that are necessary for true happiness are desirelessness and devotion. If we give up our egotism little by little and cease to despise our ancestors and the works they have written and increase our faith and devotion, our delusions will vanish gradually, our minds will become pure; We shall become fit to seek the knowledge of the nature of happiness and its causes; and we shall be enabled to obtain that happiness that we desire and to shun the misery that we detest. This and no other is the way to accomplish our aim and experience true happiness.

What led us to this dissertation here was our amazement and sorrow at seeing the disastrous decline of the Vedic-way of living and the learning of Sanskrit in spite of all the conveniences and opportunities created for their development by His Highness the Maharaja Krishnaraja Wodeyar IV. God almighty should bestow His grace upon us who are completely deluded and foolish, should teach us faith in the Vedas and the Shastras and should confer on us the inestimable boon of contentment!

The Mahaswamiji tried to stem the tide of inflowing materialism and keep the ancient ideals vividly before the huge crowds of educated Hindus who flocked to his lectures, drawn by his learned eloquence and inspiring personality, but the enthusiasm of the hour was forgotten in the daily scramble for the pelf. The Mahaswamiji did not fail to notice this; but he had a duty and he did it. He was conscious that he had to hold on to his mission bravely.

During the period of the Chaturmasya, in the month of Bhadrapada, an idol of Lord Ganapati, called Sabha Ganapati, was installed and worshipped by the Mahaswamiji according to the established custom of the Math. The Ganapati-Sabha on this occasion was even grander than usual; the Mahaswamiji delivered persuasive lectures on the burning social questions of the day. In the presence of the Lord, every evening, from four o’clock to seven o’clock, the learned men of the Math, the palace and the students of the Sanskrit College who formed the assembly, discussed knotty issues in Tarka (logic), Vyakarana (grammar) and Vedanta (philosophy of the Upanishads) under the guidance of the Mahaswamiji. These discussions between great Punditas vying with each other in their learning and capacity, immersed in an ocean of joy even those who were ignorant of the Shastras. On one occasion, His Highness the Maharaja Sri Chamarajendra Wodeyar came to the assembly and was pleased to hear that the Mahaswamiji highly appreciated the learning of the Pundits. The Mahaswamiji, on the request of the Maharaja, spoke in the assembly for two hours on the subject of image worship. He clarified that image-worship was very much in accordance with the Shastras and that through it, one can please Ishwara and obtain His grace. He established this with arguments taken from the Shastras and illustrations from our daily life.

On Wednesday, the third of the bright half of Kartika of the year Khara (1891 C.E), the Mahaswamiji was pleased to visit the Sri Chamarajendra Saraswati Prasada Pathashala at the request of the Palace Controller to install there according to Vedic rites, an image of Lord Ganapati by the name of Vidya Ganapati and in order to confer special virtue on that image, the Mahaswamiji worshipped it with his own hands and blessed all who were present. At about 2 o’clock on the same day, the Maharaja came to the Pathashala and beheld the newly installed Ganapati; he also had an interview with the Mahaswamiji and after receiving Tirtha-Prasada from the Guru, returned to the palace. In the evening, the Mahaswamiji returned to his camp in the Nanjaraya Bahadur Chatram. The Mahaswamiji visited the Sanskrit College once again and spoke eloquently for three hours on Sanskrit education and Dharma in a manner that kept the audience spell-bound. The assemblage consisted of the Maharaja, the Dewan and the other officers of the State as well as the learned men of the court.

For four months, the Mahaswamiji remained in Mysore. By means of private instruction, public teaching and lectures, he eradicated the doubts and difficulties that perplexed the minds of the Maharaja and his people and increased their faith in the Vedas and Shastras and their devotion to God. Thereby, he earned the gratitude of all, young and old. He then proceeded with his tour.

On the morning of Friday, the eleventh of the bright half of Kartika, of the year Khara (1891 C.E), the Mahaswamiji carried out his religious observances in the house of Dewan K. Seshadri Iyer and set out for the palace at about 8 o’clock with all the State honours. Having arrived at the palace, he took leave of the Maharaja and the Royal family, after bestowing on them costly gifts and his blessings by means of fruits and Mantrakshata. From the countenance of the Maharaja, he saw that his departure had caused grief and agitation in the mind of the Maharaja who loved him with heartfelt devotion and who was one of his cherished disciples. He consoled the Maharaja saying, “It is rarely that an object of reverence and love receives our constant thoughts when that object is always near to us; but when it happens to be removed to a distance, our thoughts are constantly turned towards it.” He pacified the Maharaja in this manner and convinced him that he ought not to take his departure so much to heart. He then left the palace and proceeded to a place at some small distance from Mysore on the Nanjangud Road called Chikkayyana-chatra. He encamped there for the night and travelled on the next day to Garalapuri, commonly known as Nanjangud.

This place, situated between the rivers Kapila and Koundini, is famous in the Puranas. It is fourteen miles away from Mysore, the capital of the Mysore Maharajas. Here, Paramashiva is worshipped under the well-known designation, Srikantheshwara, along with his spouse Parvati. It is stated in the Sthala-Purana (story about the sacred place) that Parashurama who had incurred the sin of matricide at the command of his father, set out on a tour and becoming enamored of the beautiful scenery in this place, desired to remain there for some days performing tapas (penance).

He selected a certain place on the banks of the Kapila for his hermitage and as it was overgrown with trees, bushes and creepers, he set about cutting them down with his axe. Suddenly, a stream of blood spurted out from the place which not only covered the axe but drenched his body as well. As he became greatly agitated and was reflecting as to what its cause could be, Paramashiva manifested himself before him in the form of a linga. What should have been the state of the mind of Parashurama, when he realized that he who came there to expiate his sin of matricide had incurred a much greater sin against Shiva! He thereupon attempted to cut-off his own head with his axe; but Shiva, full of mercy, manifested in front of him, stayed his hand and promised protection to Parashurama who was so full of devotion and assured him that he would always wear the mark caused upon his head by the blow of the axe in the form of a crescent moon. He also conferred on the clay soil of the locality, the power of healing wounds and stopping the flow of blood and informed Parashurama that if a temple was built in that place and He was worshipped in it, all sins would be forgiven and His grace would be secured.

If we consider the miraculous things taking place in this place even in this age of the prevalence of Kali, we cannot help believing the above Sthala-Purana. Some years back, a Mohammedan ruler is said to have sent to this place an elephant which was blind in both its eyes with the object of testing the power of this deity, and to have vowed that he would believe in the powers of this deity in case the elephant was cured of blindness in both the eyes within a stipulated time and that otherwise he would demolish the temple. That elephant was made to bathe every day in the Kapila River, and taken twelve times round the temple in Pradakshina (circumambulation) within the outermost enclosure; its eyes were smeared with a paste of clay and the sacred tirtha (water) from the temple. At the end of the stipulated time, the covering of paste was removed and it was seen that the elephant had regained perfect vision in both the eyes.

The Mohammedan ruler who was convinced of the power of the deity was pleased to call the deity Hakim Nanjunda (Doctor Nanjunda)! This story which is current at the present day is only one hundred and twenty five years old. We would not be justified in refusing to believe in a story of such recent date.

The Mahaswamiji entertained great love and devotion towards Srikantheshwara. He remained in Nanjangud for twenty two days and worshipped Srikantheshwara in a variety of ways and prayed devoutly for the welfare and happiness of His Highness, the Maharaja, and the royal family as well as for his innumerable disciples. He then left Nanjangud and travelling through Chamaraj Nagar, Gundlupet, Heggada, Devanakote, Yedatore, Hunsur and Arkalgud, he entered Coorg with the object of reaching Talakaveri, the place where the River Cauvery takes its rise. Many of the indigenous Coorgs are rich and prosperous. The principal temples and chatrams or rest houses are subject to local supervision by the Coorgs and the charities of the country are under good management.

When the Mahaswamiji visited the place, the principal residents of the place welcomed him with great reverence and love. In Mercara and Bhagamandala, the Mahaswamiji was provided with accommodation inside the temples and he and his followers were treated as guests of the temple authorities, while many of the prominent gentlemen of the place visited him with their families and worshipped him, bringing their offerings for Bhiksha and Pada-Puja; the Mahaswamiji greatly appreciated their devotion. The Mahaswamiji remained for three days at Bhagamandala, which is close to the place where the Cauvery takes its rise. He bathed at the source of the Cauvery, worshipped the river with coins of gold. From there, he travelled back to Pashchimavahini near Srirangapatnam and performed the annual Aradhana ceremonies of his Guru there. The Maharaja, Sri Chamarajendra Wodeyar, visited the Mahaswamiji here one afternoon quite unexpectedly; he returned to Mysore after spending some time with the Mahaswamiji.

The Mahaswamiji travelled from Pashchimavahini to Mandya and visiting Maddur, Shivasamudram, Kollegal and Chamarajnagar, he descended the Ghats into the Madras Presidency and reached Satyamangalam in the Coimbatore district. There, in the large and beautiful Sringeri Math situated on the banks of the river, he encamped and performed his Chaturmasya-Sankalpa.

From Satyamangalam, he travelled on to Gopichettipalayam and remained there during the days of the Dasara festival. A rich land holder named Shivakkolundu Mudaliar was desirous of installing an image of Lord Sri Subrahmanya in this place, as desired by his father. He desired to have the image installed according to the Vedic rites by the Mahaswamiji and to arrange for its worship in the Vaidika method. Till that time, the common practice in the southern districts was to conduct the consecration and the daily Pujas in the shrines in accordance with Agama methods and not in the Vaidika method. The Mahaswamiji approved of the idea and sent the Math pundits to assist the local Vaidika priests to install the deity according to Vedic rites. After the consecration ceremony was over, the Mahaswamiji visited the temple and in order to confer special sacredness in the shrine, performed his worship and recited mantras.

He then left Gopichettipalayam and travelled on to Erode, Bhavani and other places, remaining in each place for three to fifteen days as desired by his disciples and helped men to purify themselves by beholding the worship of Chandramoulishwara, partaking of Tirtha and Prasada, and by listening to his instructions. In this manner, he was travelling for about a year in these beautiful Agraharams on the banks of the Cauvery.

At a distance of about 15 miles from Tiruchirapalli, on the banks of the akhanda (unbifurcated) Cauvery, there is a village named Ayyampalyam. There was a gentleman named Tandavaraya Pillai, son of Shanmukham Pillai, living in that village. He was a good natured gentleman. His ancestors had acquired extensive and fertile lands on the banks of Cauvery and had thriven by agriculture. It had been ascertained from certain inscriptions on stones that the ancestors of Tandavaraya Pillai had set apart a third of their properties for charity and had willed that the remaining two thirds should be divided among their descendents. The properties that had been set apart for charity were kept under the management of certain members of the family who were maintaining out of the proceeds of these properties, only one charity in the form of feeding Brahmin travelers who came to the village.

By the fruits of his past merits, there arose a desire in Tandavaraya Pillai to devote the whole of the properties set apart, for charitable purposes. As his family members were worshippers of Dandayudhapani Subrahmanya, he desired to build a large temple to that deity, to install an image there and to make suitable provision for the daily and periodical worship and processions; and this desire grew up in him. Learning that the Mahaswamiji had arrived in these parts and was travelling on the banks of the Cauvery blessing his innumerable devotees, Tandavaraya Pillai made up his mind that the hour had come when he could realize his wish. He was an intelligent and far-seeing man. He knew that a temple founded by him could flourish only if it was made acceptable to all castes and that if the Mahaswamiji, who commanded universal respect and had such a pure history, undertook the task of consecrating the temple.

With this object, he invited the Mahaswamiji to make a sojourn in the village. When the Mahaswamiji arrived there, it seemed to Tandavaraya Pillai that his God Dandayudhapani had Himself come there in the form of the Mahaswamiji. As this idea became firmly rooted in his mind, his desire to entrust the task to the Mahaswamiji began to increase. On the next day, Tandavaraya Pillai communicated his wishes to the Mahaswamiji and prayed that the Mahaswamiji may be pleased to lay the foundation stone of the temple with his own happiness-bestowing hands, before proceeding on his pilgrimage to Rameshwaram. He undertook to have the temple completed before the Mahaswamiji returned from his pilgrimage, so that the installation of the deity could also be performed in Mahaswamiji’s presence, when the Mahaswamiji came to Ayyampalyam on his return journey. The Mahaswamiji yielded his consent.

On Friday, the seventh of the bright half of Chaitra, in the year Vijaya, S.S. 1816 (1893 C.E), in Simha-lagna, the Mahaswamiji performed the worship of Sri Sharada and Chandramoulishwara and other Gods and having finished his morning religious duties, proceeded to the place where the temple was to be erected, had the worship of Ganapati and other religious ceremonies duly carried out and laid the foundation stone of the temple. He then conferred Prasada on Tandavaraya Pillai and directed him to complete the erection of the temple before his return journey from Rameshwaram and to also make suitable arrangements for installing in it an image of Vishnu as well as the images of Parvati and Parameshwara. The Mahaswamiji then proceeded southwards.

By this time, the occasion for Chaturmasya-Sankalpa came on. Leaving the Cauvery, he proceeded to the banks of the Amaravati in order to bless his devotees in those parts. He carried out his Chaturmasya-Sankalpa for the year Vijaya, in the village of Kozhumam or Varadarajapuram, near Udumalpet in Coimbatore district and after performing the worship of Sharada and the other worships connected with the Dasara festival in a village called Kadathur, he went on to Palani, a place in the Madurai district, sacred to Subrahmanya.

Palani is one of the most famous places in South India. A great many people come to visit the temple of Dandayudhapani Subrahmanya in this place. It is said that not a day passes without devotees bringing on their shoulders, loads of milk for Abhisheka to Lord Subrahmanya. The Mahaswamiji remained here for some days and worshipped Dandayudhapani and then proceeded onwards to Madurai via Dindigul.

The disciples of Madurai welcomed the Mahaswamiji with great love and reverence. In accordance with established precedents, the Mahaswamiji was accommodated in the Kalyana-Mantapa which forms a portion of the temple of Meenakshi Sundareswara. The Raja of Ramnad of that time, named Raja Bhaskara Sethupathi, a descendent of the ancient Setupathis, came there to visit him. With the object of affording to all the people of Madurai, a chance of seeing the Mahaswamiji, the Sethupathi Raja, took the Mahaswamiji in procession through streets decorated with pandals and festoons. The Mahaswamiji was seated in a golden palanquin decked with flowers. The crowds who had assembled to witness the procession were immense; all people, young and old, beheld the Mahaswamiji with great joy and blessed the Sethupathi Raja who was the means of giving them that happiness.

Learning that the Mahaswamiji was on his way to Rameshwaram, Raja Bhaskara Sethupathi, begged the Mahaswamiji to visit his territories after visiting Rameshwaram and stay in Ramnad, his place of residence, for some time and thereby bless him and his people. The Mahaswamiji accordingly journeyed on to his territories and after halting in several places, reached Rameshwaram on Friday, the fourteenth of the bright half of Vaishakha of the year Jaya, S.S. 1817 (1894 C.E). Here, according to the usual custom, he was accommodated with lodging in the third enclosure of the temple of Ramanatha. From the time of entering the Ramnad territories, the expenses of the Mahaswamiji’s camp were almost fully borne by the Raja of Ramnad. The Mahaswamiji proceeded to Dhanushkoti and after remaining there for three days and distributing charities in abundance, he returned to Rameshwaram.

From time immemorial, Goddess Rajarajeshwari has been worshipped in the palace of the Sethupathis of Ramnad. During the Dasara festival, special worship and processions were conducted by the Sethupathi Bhaskara Raja, with much splendor. On one of the days during Dasara, under the name of ‘Sahasra-Puja’, there was a custom which had descended from very early times, of sacrificing one thousand living creatures to the Goddess.
When the Mahaswamiji heard of this, it occurred to him that he should put a stop to this cruel practice. It was not the habit of the Mahaswamiji to speak out at once of what he thought about on any matter. One day, however, the Raja Bhaskara Sethupathi, came to see the Mahaswamiji and, of his own accord, mooted the subject and said that though he very much desired to put a stop to this practice he had not the courage to interfere with such a long standing custom and that, in case the Mahaswamiji gave him his support, he would stop the cruel custom at once. When Sethupathi Raja himself mooted the subject, the Mahaswamiji rejoiced greatly but as he was not in the habit of making any pronouncement off-hand in any matter, particularly with regard to established customs, he promised to give his answer the next day. That night, he worshipped Sri Sharada and prayed to her for an indication in his dreams as to whether he should or should not stop the custom involving cruelty.

The Mahaswamiji had a dream that night. A woman wearing a soiled garment and holding in one of her hands a drinking vessel and in the other, a broomstick, came before the Mahaswamiji and told him that she was going away. Sometime after, a married lady, wearing beautiful clothes and jewels announced herself as having come to stay. The dream gave great satisfaction to the Mahaswamiji and he determined that he should stop the cruel practice of sacrificing a thousand living creatures and substitute for it, a more humane form of worship.
When the Sethupathi Raja came with great eagerness on the next day to know the Mahaswamiji’s decision, the Mahaswamiji narrated to him his dream of the night and said that he had resolved to stop the cruel practice and had been strengthened in that determination by the Sethupati’s own wishes in this matter. The Mahaswamiji also instructed the Setupati regarding the different fruits of the Vama and Dakshina methods of worship and gave it as his decision that though the Vama method had descended from very early times, that method, which gave inferior results, ought to be abandoned and the Dakshina method, which gave far superior results, ought to be substituted for it. He then established a Srichakra at the shrine concentrating therein the divine power and installed Goddess Rajarajeshwari. The Mahaswamiji himself performed the worship of Goddess Rajarajeshwari and had the temple separated from the palace precincts and enclosed. He persuaded the Setupati to give a grant of land yielding about twelve thousand Rupees every year for the maintenance of the temple and nominated two priests from the Sringeri Math to conduct the worship. By these means, he established the Vedic method of worship at the temple and blessed the Raja and his subjects.

Raja Bhaskara Setupati of Ramanathapura was an enlightened Ruler. His generosity was exemplary. He spent fifteen annas out of every rupee of his income in charity and his income was quite disproportionate to his liberality. On account of this, he was greatly in debt and it did not seem likely at that time that the territories which he had inherited from his ancestors would be transmitted to his descendents. This became known to the Mahaswamiji and as the lineage of the Setupatis was of a very ancient origin, he felt it to be his duty somehow to save the properties from being lost. One day, when the Setupati came to see him, Mahaswamiji said to him “We are greatly pleased with the kind of hospitality and the devotion shown to us since our arrival. Your generosity equals that of Karna portrayed in the Mahabharata and though we do not deem it improper to solicit from a prince of such generosity any boon however great, I solicit from you the free gift of all your territories as Guru-dakshina (offering to the Guru).” The Raja’s delight on hearing these words knew no bounds. The magnanimous Ruler rose immediately and made a declaration that he had offered the whole of the territories to the Mahaswamiji, as desired, and prostrated himself before the Mahaswamiji. The Raja was requested to assemble the officers of the palace and all the prominent persons in a durbar the next day.

The Mahaswamiji proceeded to the durbar with his followers and sent for the young prince to attend the function. In the public assembly, he then declared that his disciple, Raja Bhaskara Setupati, had offered the whole of his territories to him as Guru-dakshina and that he, in his turn, was bestowing the same on Raja Rajeshwara Muthuramalinga Setupati, the son of Raja Bhaskara Setupati. No words can adequately describe the happiness of the people who heard the announcement. They showered praises on the benevolence of the Guru and the wonderful devotion of his disciple. In this manner, the Mahaswamiji saved the territories of the Setupati of Ramanathapura. He only accepted, out of sheer compulsion, the grant of five villages bestowed by the Setupati on the Sringeri Math and earmarked it for the purpose of worshipping Sri Sharada and Chandramoulishwara on behalf of the Rajas of Setupati for the sake of their welfare and prosperity. In return, the Mahaswamiji vouchsafed a crown decked with gems to the Setupati, blessed the Raja and his family and then proceeded on his travels.

In the districts of Madurai and Ramnad there is a class of merchants known as Nattu-kottai Chettiars comprised of highly successful and wealthy traders. These merchants have made it their special duty to bestow monies either separately or in communal co-operation on the ancient forms of charities, such as restoring old and dilapidated temples in southern India, establishing choultries for free feeding in ancient places of pilgrimage and constructing tanks for storing water. They had chosen a holy man from among themselves and made him the Swami of an ancient Math established at a place called Kovilur who, in turn, gave them advices on religious and philosophical matters in their own vernacular. The Nattu-kottai Chettiars sent the Kovilur Swami to the Sringeri Jagadguru with a prayer to the Jagadguru to visit their places, and accordingly, the Mahaswamiji proceeded to visit their towns. He was welcomed with great devotion and worshipped by the Nattu-kottai Chettiars according to their varying degrees of wealth and position. On this occasion, the Chettiars made up their minds to renovate the temple of Sri Sharada in Sringeri and for this purpose, subscribed thirty thousand rupees as lump sum from their community and deposited it with the Kovilur Swami and through him, prayed for the Sringeri Mahaswamiji’s kind permission for the purpose. The Guru was greatly pleased with the devotion of the Chettiars and accorded his permission saying that if such was the will of Ishwara it would be fulfilled.

Wherever the Mahaswamiji stopped, he gave daily lectures on vaidika-Dharma, which was listened to by large crowds with rapt attention; they never failed to create enthusiasm for the teachings of the Scriptures. The lectures were instinctively adapted to the capacity of the audience. When he was touring in the Agraharas on the banks of the Cauvery, where there were still great scholars, the key of his lectures was pitched in literary and often technically advanced style, interlarded with quotations from the scriptures. In places where such subjects could hardly be followed or understood, his exposition of the Vedic-Dharma was pitched in a lower key and the truths were brought home by familiar and telling illustrations, taken from everyday life.

The words, the illustrations and the apt expressions flowed freely in a melodious voice. It was a spontaneous flow welling-up from the heart. All this may be within the reach of practised oratory, though the Mahaswamiji had never practised it. But it was not these that told; it was the personality behind all these that gave an indescribable value to every word he uttered. His very presence was an education. One cannot better describe this trait of the great Mahaswamiji than in the words of the editor of the Mahaswamiji's work ‘Bhaktisudhatarangini’, Sri T.K. Balasubramaniam, one of his sincerest devotees: “No one was ushered into his holy presence who did not go back full of noble resolve to lead thence-forward a purer and a more exalted life. To hear of him was a pleasure. To see him was a privilege! To speak to him was a real blessing and to be granted special interview – Ah! That was the acme of happiness which people coveted most in all earnestness. The magnetic force of his wonderful personality was such that one word, nay one smile or even one look was quite enough to convert even the most indifferent of persons into his most ardent and obedient of disciples.”

While he was at Kovilur, the Raja of Ramnad wired the news that Chamarajendra Wodeyar, the Maharaja of Mysore had unexpectedly died in Calcutta. This news was a great grief to Mahaswamiji. He sent words of consolation to the royal family. Nearly four years had elapsed since the Mahaswamiji left Sringeri on his pilgrimage to Rameshwaram and Dhanushkoti. The main object of the journey had been fulfilled and the mind of the Mahaswamiji turned towards Sringeri, his abode. Meanwhile, the Mahaswamiji’s disciples living on the banks of the Tamraparni learnt that it was the intention of the Mahaswamiji to return to Sringeri. Some of the most prominent among them came to Madurai with a request to the Mahaswamiji to accept the invitation of the thousands of his sishyas in that district and bless them with his visit to their places. As the Mahaswamiji was bound to his disciples by love, he could hardly ignore their request and he promised to visit Tirunelveli. He only stipulated that as he could not spare much time to travel in those parts, it would be very convenient if the disciples from all parts of the district could be requested to meet him in Tirunelveli itself to meet him and also behold the worship of Sri Chandramouliswara.

Accordingly, from Madurai, he entered Tirunelveli district. He halted in several villages on the way to Tirunelveli to bestow blessings on his disciples and encamped at a distance of two miles from Tirunelveli at the Sandhyamantapa on the banks of the River Tamraparni. After performing his religious duties of the morning there, he received several thousands of devotees who had assembled there from all parts of the district and in accordance with their prayers, he ascended the golden palanquin, on the river bank. As soon as the Mahaswamiji sat on the palanquin, a good many number of his disciples gave their shoulders to the palanquin. Such a spectacle was not a common sight. With music and the recitations of the Vedas and the wavings of Mangalarati, all people, young and old, helped to take the procession with great zeal and jubilation. The Mahaswamiji was provided with accommodation in the temple of Salivateshwara (Lord Nellayappa).
His stay for some days in Tirunelveli provided his disciples of that region the golden opportunity of beholding him, hearing his sweet discourses and receiving his blessings. He then started for Bana Tirtha, where the Tamraparni takes its rise. He remained there for three days. As the mountains where the river originates are within the territories of the Zamindar of Singampatti, all the conveniences required for the Mahaswamiji at that place were provided by the Zamindar. At the time of the Mahaswamiji’s visit, the Zamindar was without issue. The Mahaswamiji who was greatly pleased with the devotion and respectful service rendered by the Zamindar conferred on him the title ‘Tirthapati’ and blessed him saying that he would soon become a father. There is an ancient saying, which is as follows:

अष्टीणां पुनरायानां वाच्यांस्थानुवाच वति।

(What is (spoken of) quickly follows the utterances of the ancient sages.)

No wonder, the blessing of the Mahaswamiji bore fruit soon and the Zamindar became a happy father. The Mahaswamiji travelled for about forty days in Tirunelveli district and then went to Ayyampalyam where a task awaited him which was the installation of the image of Dandayudhapani Subrahmanya.

The Mahaswamiji was astonished at the zealous endeavours of Tandavaraya Pillai which had enabled him to erect a beautiful stone structure for the temple and to have all the arrangements for the installation of the image completed in so short a time after the foundation was laid. The preparatory ceremonies having been performed in accordance with the Vedic injunctions, the installation of the images of Dandayudhapani Subrahmanya, Prasanna Parameswara and Parvati as well as of the image of Lord Srinivasa was duly conducted by the Pundits deputed by the Mahaswamiji on Friday, the tenth of the dark half of Chaitra in the year Manmatha S.S. 1818 (1895 C.E). After the installation of the images, the Mahaswamiji came into the temple, consecrated and worshipped the idols and distributed tirtha and Prasada to all the assembled. Since then, that temple has been greatly enlarged by the erection of Mantapas, enclosures and turrets. A large number of ornaments of gold and precious stones have been provided for the Gods. Worships and processions are being carried out regularly.

It has already been stated that the Mahaswamiji was anxious to return to Sringeri. He therefore passed into Salem district and then to Hosur and Anekal. While the Mahaswamiji was in Anekal, he received an invitation from several of his leading disciples in Bangalore requesting him to give them the joy of beholding him, and stating that many years had elapsed since the last visit of a Jagadguru to Bangalore. Although the recent sorrow of bereavement caused by the death of Sri Chamarajendra Wodeyar made it hard for the Mahaswamiji to visit Bangalore, he considered it his duty to see the Dewan and other State officers, make enquiries of them and give words of consolation and advice to the members of the royal family. He, therefore, made up his mind to visit Bangalore. K. Sheshadri Iyer, who was then the Dewan of Mysore, having learnt about the Mahaswamiji’s intended visit, caused inquiries to be made as to what honours had been accorded to the late Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji on the occasion of previous last visit to Bangalore during the British Commission days at the request of Sri Krishnaraya Wodeyar III; and having arranged for similar honours on this occasion, received the Mahaswamiji in the most appropriate manner. The Mahaswamiji remained in Bangalore for one week and gave interviews to the Dewan and the principal officers of the State, made enquiries regarding the welfare of the royal family and requested the Dewan to convey to the members of the Royal family such words of consolation and advice as were in keeping with his affection to the late Maharaja. He also gave to all his disciples in Bangalore the happiness of beholding him and his blessings and was contemplating his return to Sringeri through Tumkur.

Meanwhile, Her Highness Sri Kempa Nanjammani Vani Vilasa Sannidhana, the Maharani regent of Mysore, who had taken under her protection the administration of the Mysore state and under her guardianship the young princess of Mysore and was fulfilling her duties with great wisdom, sent an invitation through the Dewan requesting the Mahaswamiji to visit Mysore before his return to Sringeri and give her and the princes, who were plunged in sorrow, the happiness of beholding him and such words of consolation and advice as would serve to assuage their sorrow.

Induced by the Dewan, K Sheshadri Iyer, to undertake the journey to Mysore, the Mahaswamiji left Bangalore and arrived in Mysore on Wednesday the fifth of the dark half of Jyeshta in the year Manmatha of S.S. 1818 (1895 C.E). Both when the Mahaswamiji entered the city and when he came near the palace, his countenance which showed, in general, a quiet genial smile, was overcast with sorrow and this caused perturbation in the minds of all beholders. As soon as he came to the principal gateway of the palace, he beheld the two little princes awaiting his arrival; they seemed to him like divine brothers Rama and Lakshmana, who were separated from their father at a very tender age to protect the sacrificial rites of Vishwamitra. The Mahaswamiji went into the palace, saw the Maharani Regent and the princes and consoled them with the teachings of Dharma in a variety of ways. He then left for his quarters in the Sanskrit College as arranged by the authorities of the Palace.

Later, he gave Mantropadesha to the Maharani Regent and instructed her regarding the performance of Shivapuja and other duties. Leaving Mysore, he travelled through Pashcimavahini and other places and reached Sringeri with his retinue on Saturday, the seventh of the bright half of Ashada in the year Manmatha (1895 C.E).

The Mahaswamiji's second tour lasted for over four years from 1891 C.E to 1895 C.E. During this tour, a number of gentlemen whom modern education had turned into agnostics, came under the spiritual influence of the Mahaswamiji, received Upadesha from him and began to devote a portion of the day to prayer and thoughts of God.
6. Life at Sringeri

For some days after his return to Sringeri, the Mahaswamiji seemed always plunged in deep reflection and indifferent to his surroundings. He forgot even his daily physical requirements and his attention had to be drawn to these by his faithful attendants. Many causes contributed to this state of things. The late Maharaja was so attached to the Mahaswamiji by ties of affection and devotion that he never failed to execute the least expressed of His wishes. When the affairs of the Sringeri Jagir had once again got into some disorder, the Mahaswamiji requested the Maharaja to set matters right. The Maharaja immediately gave orders to his Dewan, K. Seshadri Iyer, to look into the matter.

The settlement of the Jagir Inams was immediately taken up and the rights of the Inamdars, the tenants and the Peetham were carefully defined; the lands unjustly alienated were restored to the Peetham; unauthorised alienations were prohibited at the risk of resumption. As a result of this settlement and the careful supervision of the agent of the Peetham and his faithful servants, the revenues of the Jagir rose from Rs.60,000/- a year, to Rs.1,30,000/-; the lands granted by the Raja of Ramnad yielded an annual revenue of Rs.8,000/-. The long-standing debts of the Jagir were cleared; gold and silver plates and jewels were freshly made at a cost of over one lakh of rupees. The Mahaswamiji himself never gave a thought to these material considerations; but his very presence was enough to inspire his agent and his subordinates with zeal and it was their fidelity, aided by the protecting-hand of the ruler of the State that had accomplished all these tasks.

Ever since the dismemberment of the Vijayanagar Empire, the fortunes of the Sringeri Peetham were carefully looked after by the rulers of Mysore and by none, so much as by the late Maharaja. His being taken away suddenly in the prime and bloom of life had contributed to the grief of the Mahaswamiji. The Mahaswamiji was intensely emotional; pity and sympathy would well-up from his heart at the least sign of distress; he would walk gently on earth, looking carefully around him, lest he should, by chance, tread on any ant or worm; he could never bear to see others suffering in his presence.

Once, when the Mahaswamiji was being borne on the palanquin in a grand procession in the city of Mysore, he saw an old woman looking at him intently and with tears in her eyes; the Mahaswamiji noticed this, in the huge throng of enthusiastic spectators and devotees, recognized in her his old nurse, who had taken him about on her shoulders when he was a child of two or three and fondled him on her knees. He sent for her, loaded her with presents and sent her home more pleased with the simple, kind words he spoke and the reminiscences of his child-life and her tender care of him than by the presents. He never failed to enquire after the comforts of one and all who came as visitors to the Peetham, though his confidence in his agent and the attendants was unbounded; he saw to it that his court pundits lived in comfort.

One of these, though learned like the other pundits, had a failing; he was very short-tempered and the servant who had been employed by the Math to cook for him and otherwise look to his wants was so much put-out by the treatment of the pundit that, one day, he abruptly left the Math, without informing anyone, and returned later. The Shastri waited till five in the evening, fasting and gnashing his teeth; but the cook not turning up, he staggered to the presence of the Mahaswamiji and told his tale of woe, hinting that he was dying of hunger. The Mahaswamiji, at once, left his seat and went in haste to the kitchen to see if the run-away servant was there. The agent who was inside the kitchen, superintending the preparations, noticed this unusual proceeding in alarm, caused the servant concerned, who was there, to get out of the sight of the Mahaswamiji, who turned back to his seat and sent for the agent.

Was not the Mahaswamiji aware of the failing of this pundit? Could he not have easily surmised that the man had brought the trouble on himself by his own short temper? Could not the Mahaswamiji have sent for his agent by a nod of his head and should he have walked to the kitchen himself, when hundreds of attendants were waiting to readily execute his slightest command? It only shows how tender-hearted he was. Such anecdotes may be multiplied; but enough perhaps has been said to show that the most characteristic feature about him was his tenderness of heart, which hastened to the relief of distress, without respect to the fault which might have brought about the distress.

It is needless to add that the sight of the innocent boy-princes of Mysore, removed from the strong hand of paternal control touched his heart as nothing else could have done and the first thing he did on his return to Sringeri was pray to Goddess Sharadamba, soliciting her to keep them from all peril and make them wise and pious. A couple of stanzas from this hymn are given below:

श्रीरामलक्ष्मणाविव सोहां प्राप्य सुर्विरं सुचिरम् ।
श्रीचचामराजपुत्रों जीवास्तां शारदाम्ब तव कृपया ॥

(O Sharadamba, may the two sons of Sri Chamaraja become close to each other like Rama and Lakshmana and achieve well-founded and long-lasting success by Your grace.)

भारति सम्पद्दरितां बुद्धा चैवातितीक्ष्णाय पूर्णाः ।
आयुष्मन्तो सुखिनों भूयास्तां चामराजमुङमाराः ॥

(O Bharati! May the two fine children of Sri Chamaraja be thoroughly endowed with prosperity, very sharp intellects, long life and happiness.)

This hymn he caused to be sung every night, before the Goddess, at the close of the evening service. This brought him some peace of mind.

The Mahaswamiji had spent four years in travelling and had seen time after time the hourly increase of Adharma owing to the influence of the times. He had seen the decline of the knowledge of the Vedas and the Shastras and of the faith in them, as well as the obvious increase of the feelings of pride and egotism and absurd doubts and of the modes of life in keeping with these attributes of egotism and want of faith. He had also seen the miseries and calamities with which these evil tendencies had afflicted both the country as a whole and the individual souls.

One of the poems composed by him, ‘Sri Sharada Stava Kadambam’, reveals his concern regarding the state of affairs that prevailed then; one or two stanzas may be here given as samples:

(नास्तिक्यं बुद्धिहत्तमानसवारिजातां- स्त्यत्तात्मकमर्मिनिच्याच्छविहुशो याज्ञाधान ।)
(कृत्तमाक्षतततीन्द्रियिक्ष्य दुःख-वार्धीं निम्मयन्तिममम्म सुखे नियुक्तः ॥)

(My mind is sunk in ocean of grief seeing a number of men, Brahmins and the like, who have spoiled their lotus-like hearts by a spirit of atheism, who have given up their ordained duties and who sport cropped heads. Oh my Mother, yoke it into bliss.)
Oh Mother, quickly vouchsafe people with the knowledge that there is God, that births are varied (according to past deeds), that it is easy to attain worlds (like the heaven) for those who perform their ordained duties, that there is sin and that there are worlds that give (misery) the result of the sins committed.

For about fifteen days after he reached Sringeri, he appeared to be not his own self. He never spoke to anyone. If any one came and prostrated himself and remained standing, the Mahaswamiji never asked him questions nor opened conversation with him. He would hastily finish his baths and other daily religious duties and would sit for hours in a lonely place with bent head and would take no interest in the affairs of the Math. It became necessary for other people to induce him to take his meals. Those who were near him and did not understand the real cause of the Mahaswamiji’s dejection began to entertain serious doubts about his health. After a fortnight, this dejection of the Mahaswamiji disappeared and he swung into action.

He wanted a Sanskrit College to be started immediately in the presence of Sri Sharada and arrangements to be made for clothing and feeding the students, both the local residents and those who come from foreign parts. In accordance with his command, suitable teachers in the Vedas and the Shastras as well as students fit to undergo instruction were secured and after duly worshipping in Sharada Temple and obtaining the favour of the deity, a Sanskrit College was started under the name of ‘Sadvidya Sanjivini Samskruta Mahapathashala’ and work was commenced on Saturday, the sixth of the bright half of Shravana in the year Manmatha (1895 C.E).

The Mahaswamiji also commenced to teach Vedanta enthusiastically to some advanced pupils and completed teaching the commentaries on the Brahma-sutras, the Upanishads and the Gita which are known as ‘Prasthanatraya’, in the next three years. During this period, he spent all his time in the study and teaching of the works on Vedanta-Shastra. On one occasion, the Mahaswamiji was enquired the cause of the state of mental dejection which prevailed for some days after his return to Sringeri and the reason for his growing enthusiasm for the spread of learning after that dejection had passed away. He replied that a feeling of sadness had come over him when he beheld the condition of the Indians of the present day; but that he had since come to the conclusion that it was impossible to put a stop all at once to the Adharma that was due to the times, that it was also useless to grieve over the matter and that all that he could do was to wait for better times, taking precautions to preserve the Vedas and the Shastras uncontaminated and spending his time in worship and contemplation to earn the blessing of Ishwara. He had therefore gradually overcome his dejection and taken enthusiastically to the teaching of Vedanta.

In the mind of the Mahaswamiji, who was thus engaged constantly in the teaching of Vedanta, the love of a life of solitude began to increase. It has already been shown that this propensity was noticeable even in his boyhood and that it had been restrained by powerful causes. A few years previous to this, the clearing of a bit of forest land to the South of the Sringeri math on the other bank of the Tunga River had been commenced on account of the wild beasts that had infested it and made it dangerous to the cattle of Sringeri. To this portion of land, the Mahaswamiji gave the name of Narasimhavana in memory of his great Guru. The land had not been completely cleared and there were no houses suitable for dwelling built upon it. Nevertheless, the Mahaswamiji desired to live there in a cottage built of bamboo and leaves of trees and he went there with the processional image of Sri Sharadamba on the morning of the fifth day of the dark half of Aswayuja in the year Hevilambi (1897 C.E). On that day, the worship of Lord Chandramoulishwara and Sharada and the feeding of disciples were carried on in pandals temporarily built for the purpose.

At five o’clock in the evening, the image of Sharada was sent back to the temple on the northern bank of the river. The Mahaswamiji kept the Chandramoulishwara with himself and slept with a few followers within the new area. Till then the object of the Mahaswamiji had not been understood. On the morning of the next day, he commanded that a few absolutely necessary cottages of bamboo and leaves of trees be erected, as he had the intentions of living there itself for some days in solitude. This appeared strange and inexplicable to some, though this desire on the part of the Mahaswamiji was in keeping with his mental attitude and the duties of his Ashrama.

From that day, the Mahaswamiji began to cast aside one by one all the regal pomp and paraphernalia of the Peetham. He discarded the gold and silver utensils, handed down from a succession of great Maharajas for the worship of Chandramoulishwara. With great devotion he began to worship Shiva three times a day, making use of only the pure water of the Tunga and the flowers and leaves of the forest. He praised Shiva incessantly by reciting verses addressed to him. He gave up eating salt, sour or pungent foods. After four O’clock in the evening each day, taking one of his followers with him, he would wander in the forests close to Narasimhavana or enjoy the happiness of Nirguna-Dhyana sitting under a tree. At six in the evening, he would return to his hermitage. While endeavouring to detach himself from human relationships in this manner, he still kept up his teaching of Vedanta to his pupils after the morning worship was over, till about 11 o’clock in the forenoon.

In the meantime, a communication was received from Sir K. Sheshadri Iyer, Dewan of Mysore, stating that in accordance with the desire of Maharani Regent, His Highness, the Maharaja Sri Krishnaraja Wodeyar IV would in the course of a tour through the state undertaken before attaining his majority and taking over the reins of administration, visit Sringeri in order to receive the blessings of the Jagadguru. The Dewan requested that this information may be submitted to the Mahaswamiji in order that arrangements may be made for the reception of the Maharaja in a manner befitting the dignity both of the Peetham and of the distinguished visitor. The news was immediately conveyed to the Mahaswamiji with a prayer requesting him to return to the North bank of the river and take up his residence in the Math buildings.

The Mahaswamiji was immensely pleased with the news of the visit of the Maharaja. When this was made known to Mahaswamiji, and the agent solicited instructions in the matter, the Mahaswamiji said “You are there to receive the prince and his suite in a manner befitting the prince’s exalted rank. Make all suitable arrangements and receive the prince according to the precedent of the Peetham. I shall remain in my hermitage and give my blessings to the Maharaja.”

The Maharaja arrived in Sringeri with his tutor Mr. S.M. Fraser on Wednesday, the ninth of the dark half of Kartika in the year Vilambi S.S.1821 (7th December 1898). Being received by the Math authorities with all appropriate honours in accordance with precedents, His Highness and the European officers who accompanied him crossed the Tunga River and proceeded to Narasimhavana. He visited the Mahaswamiji who received him in a special pandal erected for the purpose and after the usual inquiries of welfare took leave of the Mahaswamiji and returned to the North Bank and encamped in a portion of the Math buildings specially fitted up for his reception.

On the next day, by the command of the Maharani Regent and under instructions from the Dewan, devout worship was carried on and offerings made at all the temples of Sringeri praying for the prosperity of the Maharaja. Brahmins were feasted and gifts of coins were made in abundance. On the next morning, the Maharaja proceeded again to the Mahaswamiji’s retreat and performed Pada-Puja with earnestness and devotion. The Mahaswamiji blessed him with a talisman for his protection from evils. Having obtained tirtha and Prasada from the Mahaswamiji, the Maharaja returned to his camp.

The respect for the Mahaswamiji that had arisen in the mind of Mr. Fraser by the casual glimpse that he had of the Mahaswamiji during his visit of the previous day, made him anxious to visit the Mahaswamiji and to have a long conversation with him. He communicated his wish to the Mahaswamiji through the Math authorities and was informed that he could visit the Mahaswamiji at about four O’clock in the evening. He came at the appointed hour and stayed with the Mahaswamiji till eight o’clock at night, the conversation being carried on through an interpreter. The simple habits of the gentle-mannered Mahaswamiji, the genial smile that was ever hovering about his lips, the melody of his words rich with thoughts bewitched the tutor and he forgot the passage of time. The high appreciation in which the Mahaswamiji was held by Mr. Fraser is reflected in one of the letters of Mr. Fraser written to the Mahaswamiji after the former’s return from Sringeri.

On the night of the third day, a banquet was given to the European gentlemen who accompanied the Maharaja under the kind supervision of Mr. Carr, the Deputy commissioner of Kadur district. After the banquet was over, they witnessed the procession of the image of Sri Sharadamba placed on a raft and floated along the Tunga River. The Maharaja and the Mahaswamiji were seated on Asanams (seats) placed on the river bank and the procession lasted till about 2 O’clock at night. The European gentlemen present were greatly pleased and Mr. Fraser spoke on behalf of himself and others thanking the Mahaswamiji. The European gentlemen then returned to their camp. The Maharaja returned to his lodgings after receiving the blessings of the Mahaswamiji and the Mahaswamiji returned to the hermitage. On the next morning, the Maharaja came once more to Narasimhavana and distributed presents to the pundits in the presence of the Mahaswamiji, and after receiving phala and Mantrakshata he proceeded on his further tour. These incidents produced no change in the dispassionate nature of the Mahaswamiji; such is the very essential characteristic of all Jivanmuktas, say the Shastras.

Great princes used to come to him, wealthy noblemen with large sums of money for the Math, which they respectfully laid at his feet; poor people came to him in great numbers seeking help; also people who, or whose children, were suffering from maladies sought his aid, as well as those who came to display their learning and get rewards. He received them with equal kindness, showed equal solicitude for the proper entertainment of the rich or the relief of the distressed; each one went away with the feeling that it was he that had been foremost in the thoughts of the Guru. To little children, especially, who approached him, he had a soft corner. When great scholars, great Yogis and Jnanis came, he could talk with them on the most abstruse questions of ontology with an ease and flow that were marvellous and when he was talking with little children, he became a little child himself, delighting in their ingenious prattle and pleasing them with fruits and things they valued most.

After returning to Sringeri in the year Manmatha (1895
C.E) from his four-year tour in Southern India, he remained for twelve years in Sringeri from the year Manmatha to the year Paraabhava (1895 C.E to 1907 C.E). During this period, he gave instruction three times in the three commentaries known as Prasthanatraya to sannyasins who had renounced the world and householders who were keen to acquire knowledge.

Throughout the twelve years from 1895 to 1907, the Mahaswamiji was thinking of what should be done to check the drifting away of the people of the land from their old moorings. He sought the help of first and greatest master of his line, Sri Shankarabhagavatpada, who had found the land torn asunder by conflicting creeds and abominable practices in the name of religion and established peace, tolerance and a broad outlook in the country. The great master's image in the Math was placed in a conspicuous shrine and the Mahaswamiji arranged for an annual festival in his honour, commencing on the Shukla Pratipat of Vaishakha and ending on the fifth, the anniversary of the master's birth. In the mornings, all these five days, special adoration and Archanas to the image of the master, recitation of his great Bhashyas, lectures by the Mahaswamiji himself in the evenings in simple, easy style on the teachings of the master - the programme concluded at night with a procession in the streets of Sringeri with musical recitals of the master's life and his achievements. This movement has since spread to other parts of the land.

In December 1901, the prince of Mysore once again paid a visit to the Mahaswamiji at Sringeri with his tutor and returned with his blessings, before assuming the reins of government, which he did in August 1902.

Once during this period, a friend was deputed by Pundit Madan Mohan Malaviya to invite the Mahaswamiji to Benares to lay the foundation stone of the Benares Hindu University. He regretted that he had to decline the invitation, the date chosen for the function being near and the time for travelling such a long way being insufficient. It was suggested that special trains or motor cars could be arranged for speedy travel and return. The Mahaswamiji said that the long established precedents of the Peetham had to be respected, that walking on foot had been at first the only method of locomotion adopted by his predecessors, that it was only during the time of Vidyaranya, the king-maker of the fourteenth century C.E., that the use of the palanquin and other vestiges of regal pomp and show had been substituted, that these signs of dignity had their own use in influencing people and that he could not bring himself to break the tradition which had the sanction of centuries behind it. Instead, he sent a pair of his Guru’s padukas which, he believed, had greater power than he could ever possess to ensure the prosperity of the great institution which was to be established in the most sacred city of Varanasi, for the resuscitation of the culture of India.

His love and devotion to his Guru cannot be understood by the educated people of today, who are accustomed to look upon instruction as a commercial bargain. The hymns he has composed in praise of his Guru are sincere outpourings of his heart. The first thing he did after bath every morning was to take padukas which had been used by his Guru in his life-time, clean them with clothes, then place the padukas on his own head, uttering the prayer that his Guru's padukas were his greatest refuge in life. He would talk for hours on his Guru's greatness; and he never talked what did not proceed from the very depths of his heart. He had a strong conviction that the several images of the deities in the Peetham were living representatives of the Gods themselves. He carefully looked into the milk and sugar before he offered them to the God. He examined the fresh flowers that had been fetched by his servants before placing them at the feet of the Gods, lest they should contain withered or otherwise unworthy ones. It was not merely to set an example to the thousands who came to witness the Puja, but this feeling of reverence and attachment was instinctive with him.

His childlike trust in the symbols of Godhead co-existed with his capacity for abstract meditation. For days together, he gave up the external forms of worship and devoted himself to meditating on the Supreme. He used to spend a month almost every year, on the hill not far from Sringeri, known as Narasimha Parvata. Here he lived in a hermitage, a little removed from the quarters of his attendants and spent his forenoon in prayer and meditation. In the evenings he used to walk on the hills for two or three miles, alone. Sannyasins and others who came to pay their respects to him would stand a little aloof and follow him a little distance behind, after their prostrations; He did not speak to any one on these occasions but communed with himself and nature. Only, his bright smile irradiated the atmosphere around him and brought peace of mind to those who beheld him even from a distance.

That famous poem of Sadashiva-Brahmendra, Atma-vidya-vilasa, was his favourite work, which he used to repeat to himself. Oftentimes when he was seated among his pupils, he used to ask one of them to sing the verses of this poem in a sweet voice. For five or six minutes he would be listening; but after that he would forget himself in the rapture of Self-communion induced by the poem; his head would bend down and he would be in a trance. This has been noticed by his pupils several times. Once he was seated in contemplation under a tree in this hill; a wild hill-fly settled on his thigh and drank his blood. The blood streamed down; but the Mahaswamiji was not aware of it. The agent, who was standing by, dared not disturb him. It was only after he came to himself that he noticed a feeling of cold in the thigh and saw the mischief of the wild fly.

The noteworthy feature in all this was that his self-forgetfulness in the Samadhi on the Supreme Brahman was followed by his wakeful state by intense love of God, induced by his veneration for such outward symbols as the padukas of his Guru, the images of his worship. It was a love born of no earthly consideration, a love that seeks no return, an intense and ethereal flame that baffles all analysis, that glories in self-prompted and unquestioning surrender. This Avyaja-bhakti (devotion without motives) led to the Light and the vision beatific - in which the God in man and the God in the Universe are fused into one. Sri Shankaracharya says in Vivekachudamani.

मोक्षकारणसामग्र्यं भक्तिरेव गरीयसि।

(Amongst the means to liberation, devotion is the foremost.)

This is not the lower sort of Bhakti which seeks human ends but the purest love of God; this was almost instinctive with the Mahaswamiji.
The great psychic powers flowed of their own accord from such divine love goes without saying. Once in the course of his tour through Travancore, a certain poet of a village called Ashrama approached him with the prayer that his dumb boy should be cured. The Mahaswamiji felt pity for the poor boy and asked the man to visit him with the boy at Suchindra, his next camp. There he taught a certain mantra to the poet and ordered him to sanctify a vessel of water with the intense repetition of the mantra every day for three months and sprinkle it on the boy and cause him to drink a spoonful with faith. This, the man did; the boy's dumbness gradually decreased; he began to speak a few words and in course of time got cured. The Brahmin poet has referred to this incident in a Stotra of his, composed later:

आश्रामवासिणि जयमुनमुक्तविद्रावणपणिणताभ्याम् ।
आनन्दसन्दर्भवेभवाभ्यां नमो नम: श्रीगुपावादकाभ्याम् ॥

(Repeated salutations to the pair of padukas of the pre-eminent Guru that removed the dumbness of the son of the Brahmin livening in the village of Ashrama and confer bliss.)

The Mahaswamiji, however, never thought he had a part to play on such occasions. He would only pour his heart out to the Divine Mother:

मातवीद्यमुक्तीभवनमुक्तमहारोगसप्तिताजः
भूताविष्टश्च तत्त्वश्रमणमचिरात्काशकः सुदूरात् ॥
(Desirous of a prompt cure people afflicted by major ailments such as deafness and dumbness as also those possessed by evil spirits come to me from afar and pray to me for relief under the impression that I have the competence to quickly put an end to these problems. O mother, O daughter of the Himalayas who bears the moon in Her crest, what am I to do? Tell me.)

(Devotees with various major diseases or possessed by evil spirits request me for quick relief from their great suffering. I am ignorant of the various means of treatment such as mantras and Yantras. What can I do? I know no treatment other than a little thought of Your lotus feet.)

He had unbounded faith in the power of the Mother of the Universe and of his Guru and he simply prayed to them and sent away those that came to him, with some holy ashes or some consecrated water in the name of the Mother or Guru.

One Hanumanthayya, an Amildar in the Mysore Province, had no issues; he came of a respectable family of long standing. He married a second time in the hope of progeny. But he got none. He was now fifty years and lost all hope of getting children and bequeathing to them his fortune. He now wished to hand over what he had, to the Sringeri Peetham, wrote a will to that effect and prayed to the Mahaswamiji to accept his bequest for the Peetham. The Mahaswamiji sent him back saying 'Mother does not want your fortune; She prefers that you should bequeath your fortune to your children. So please take the will and go back to your place’. The gentleman instead of taking back the will as directed, simply added a codicil that if he should get issues his proportion might go to them; otherwise they should go to the Peetham, and left it with the authorities of the Peetham. The man got afterwards three sons and three daughters and lived to a ripe old age. Instances may be multiplied; but it is needless. There are hundreds who have had personal experience of the Mahaswamiji’s potent blessings.
7. Preparations for the Kalady Consecration

The Mahaswamiji was, all the while, painfully aware of the spread of materialism in the country over which his Peetham possessed spiritual jurisdiction. The remedies he adopted, however inadequate in his own estimation, were the establishment of schools for the spread of Vedic and Shastraic learning wherever possible and his attempt to create a generation of Pundits who could go about the country and combat the tendencies of the age both by precept and example. He established a Sanskrit Pathashala at Sringeri on which, as observed already, he caused to be spent annually, by no means small, (in the 1900’s) a sum of Rs.12,000/-. He had about him a succession of advanced students, whom he trained, in the course of the twelve years of his quiet stay at Sringeri and sent in batches, fully equipped to fight the evil of agnosticism.

One other remedy, he had been slowly maturing in his mind. He believed that unless the spirit of the great master, Sri Shankaracharya, again descended on earth, righteousness could not be re-established in the land. He could only pray for the descent. So, why not do something more to help 'the re-descent'? Why not build a shrine at the birthplace of Sri Shankaracharya, and place his statue there, which would continue to be adored and prayed to, by hosts of sincere devotees and from which a perennial stream of spiritual influence could flow and flood the land? But the very birthplace had become a dim memory; still it could be identified by the description given of it in Madhaviya-shankara-digvijayam, an authentic biography on Sri Shankaracharya.

While these thoughts were revolving in his mind, Sir K. Seshadri Iyer came on a visit to Sringeri to pay his respects to the Mahaswamiji. The Guru broached the subject to him. Sir Seshadri Iyer was one who esteemed the blessings of the Mahaswamiji as greater than any other good. So, Seshadri Iyer gladly accepted the holy command, and in spite of his multifarious duties, he proceeded to Travancore and made inquiries regarding the birth place of Sri Shankaracharya as described in the Madhaviya-shankara-digvijaya. There, he learned about the existence of three different places with the name Kalady. One was near Thiruvananthapuram, one near Ernakulam, and another near Kozhikode. On enquiry and with help from the state officials, he found that the description found in the Shankara-Vijaya matched with that of a spot covered by Kuttanad (a low-lying area covering parts of Alleppey, Kottayam and Quilon Districts) falling in the division of Kottayam in Travancore State. And that was the village Kalady that he was looking for. He not only found every description mentioned in the Shankara-digvijaya applicable to the place, but he found that its intrinsic beauty was such as to make it worthy of being the birth place of Sri Shankaracharya.

The River Purna was flowing deep through this land and nature had lavished there, all the wealth of charming scenery. The Dewan then returned to Sringeri and made the Mahaswamiji fully acquainted with the facts. The Mahaswamiji determined to clear the spot all round of the natural growth of centuries and build a shrine there; but this would take a long time and involve great cost and labour. Meanwhile, a small patch of land, where according to local tradition, stood the village where Sri Shankaracharya was born, was cleared and a very eloquent and learned preacher of Vedic-Dharma, the late Pundit Nadukaveri Srinivasa Shastri was deputed every year to go there and conduct Shankara-Jayanti (the day marking the birth of Sri Shankara Bhagavatpada), in the form of a five-day festival, giving lectures every day on the greatness and the teachings of Sri Shankara Bhagavatpada. This continued for some years. People from the adjacent parts of the country would come to this place on such occasions and enthusiastically share in the celebration. In a few years, a longing was created in the minds of the people there to acquire all the land roundabout and build a shrine there for Shankara Bhagavatpada; but it was not easy to get possession of the land.

By this time, eleven years had elapsed since the idea of the consecration of Kalady first germinated in the mind of the Mahaswamiji. Sir K. Seshadri Iyer, who had discovered the birthplace and whose influence was very powerful, was now no more, as also Pundit Srinivasa Shastri. The Mahaswamiji knew that nothing great was achieved without difficulties. He simply bided his time. During 1905-06, Sri V.P. Madhava Rao was the Dewan of Travancore. This statesman had a great reverence for the Mahaswamiji, ever since he, as Deputy Commissioner received the Mahaswamiji at Shimoga in 1885, while he was on his way to Gokarna. The Mahaswamiji thought that this was a good opportunity for arranging to get possession of the land of Kalady. Accordingly, he sent his agent and Dewan Bahadur A. Ramachandra Iyer, to Travancore on this mission in 1905 C.E. They made known the long cherished intentions of the Guru regarding the consecration of Kalady, both to the Maharaja of Travancore and his Dewan V.P. Madhava Rao.

Here a few words about the agent and the late Sri Ramachandra Iyer may not be amiss.

The agent of the Peetham then was Sri N. Srikantha Shastri, due to whose dispassionate exertions, the prosperity of the Math improved manifold. Brought within the influence of the Mahaswamiji at an early age of twelve, he received his education and training from the Mahaswamiji. He was found to possess an aptitude for management and the material concerns of the Peetham were entrusted to his supervision. The wisdom of the Mahaswamiji’s choice is shown by the remarkable progress made by the Math’s Jagirs, in matters financial and in the improvements effected in the institutions of the Peetham. He would have made a name for statesmanship of a high order in other circumstances, but the training he received under his master and the spiritual inspiration he drew from him, led him to devote all his energies to unselfish service under his master.

His younger brother, generally known as Krishna Shastri, was adopted by the wife of the elder brother of Mahaswamiji in previous Ashrama (stage of life), Lakshminarasimha Shastri, learned Nyaya and Vedanta under the Mahaswamiji, became a great Sanskrit scholar and pundit and Dharmadhikari in the court of the Maharaja of Mysore. He was known as Mysore Dharmadhikari Kunigal Rama Shastri (his adopted name) and he and his elder brother had been bound up with the fortunes of the Peetham for about forty years. Srikantha Shastri was also a poet of great merit, specially trained in this branch of fine art under his master. Srikantha Shastri’s lament at the departure of the Mahaswamiji and the ode on his mission to Kalady may be mentioned here for their sweet simplicity of style and elegance of expression. His poetical pieces have been published by the Sri Vani Vilas Press, under the title Guru-prasada-mahima-adarsa, a mirror of the powers that can be conferred by the grace of the master, an epithet which shows that it was the master’s grace that conferred on the author his poetic powers, his chasteness of thought and expression.

Dewan Bahadur A. Ramachandra Iyer was born of very poor parents at Panangudi, a village in Nannilam Taluk, Tanjore District — the only son of his father who had several daughters. His father, at great sacrifice, gave him English education. After the completion of his education, Ramachandra Iyer was first employed as a schoolmaster on a monthly salary of Rs.70/- in Malabar. He then took the B. L. Degree and settled at Madras as a lawyer of the High Court of Judicature. He soon rose to be the leader of the Bar and became distinguished for his forensic skill and learning. The Maharaja of Travancore requested the Government of Madras to select someone for the Chief Judgeship of the Travancore High Court. The choice of the judges of the Madras High Court unanimously fell on Mr. Ramachandra Iyer. He accepted this offer, though, peculiarly, he was a loser thereby, for he had a very lucrative practice at the Madras Bar and his salary as the Chief Judge of Travancore was far below his income as a practising vakil. But a Judge's quiet life was more congenial to his temperament. With his earnings as a lawyer, he had built a decent house in his native village, had purchased landed property there and placed his parents in comfortable circumstances. He himself had no children; but his sisters had many, whom he brought up and educated at his expense and he spent a considerable portion of his earnings in giving stipends to poor, deserving students.

Hardly had a year passed after accepting the Chief Judgeship of Travancore, when he was invited by the Maharaja of Mysore to accept a judgeship in the Chief Court of Mysore. He accepted the position and was a Judge till he retired. He had seen the Mahaswamiji for the first time in 1891, when in response to the invitation of his friend, Sir K. Seshadri Iyer, he had gone to Mysore where the Mahaswamiji was putting up in the Dewan’s quarters on his way to Rameshwaram. In 1895, when the Mahaswamiji was at Bangalore on his way back from a tour, Ramachandra Iyer had the second interview. He was a good and upright gentleman, with high principles and liberal with his purse in a good cause; but so far he had shown no inclination for any religious pursuit. The Mahaswamiji, however, was able to note his latent possibilities. He simply invited Ramachandra Iyer to Sringeri, where there would be greater opportunities for leisurely conversation. This, Ramachandra Iyer did at the earliest opportunity, when his heart was touched by the Mahaswamiji’s deep piety, his immense learning, and his simple, unostentatious life, amidst all the grandeur of his position. One visit was succeeded by another, till he made it a rule to spend all his vacations at Sringeri. Little by little, he learnt at the master’s feet, till spiritual quest became his one, all-absorbing pursuit. He now wished to retire altogether from public life and simply waited for the master’s permission. Three years he waited for getting the required permission and when at last he got it, he retired, though the Maharaja was loath to part with his services and thereafter he devoted himself solely to the service of his spiritual master.

Now to resume the narrative: Mr. Ramachandra Iyer and Mr. Srikantha Shastri went to Travancore and had an interview with the Dewan, V.P. Madhava Rao. They then went to Kalady and inspected the place. The River Purna was flowing by, in a clear limpid stream; the bathing-ghat there was held sacred by the neighbouring villages and people used to come and bathe there on sacred days like the new moon, the tradition here being that Sri Sri Shankaracharya bathed at this very ghat. Nearby was a shrine of Krishna, as also a Math belonging to a Nambudri Sanyasin. All the land about, known as Kalady Sanketa, belonged to this Math; but the sannyasin of the math had only jennmi right (the hereditary owner of the land, who traditionally could not sell it) - that of a land-lord and was entitled to nothing more than a fixed light-rent paid by the cultivating tenants who possessed permanent occupancy rights. It was not easy to oust these tenants or bring them to part with their rights.

Just at this juncture, came the Act of the Governor General of India, then Lord Curzon, for the preservation of antiquities and conservation of ancient monuments. Similar enactments came into force in the Indian States. The Government of Travancore acting under this Resolution acquired the land of Kalady, freeing it from all encumbrances in order to carry out the desire of Mahaswamiji to commemorate and preserve the birth place of Sri Shankaracharya and place it as an offering at the disposal of the Mahaswamiji. The Maharaja also sanctioned a sum of ten-thousand rupees for clearing the land of the growth of centuries and building a shrine there. The agent reported all this and the great generosity of the Maharaja of Travancore to his master, who, seeing that the times were propitious for the carrying out of his long cherished object, ordered that preparations might be speedily made for a tour to Kalady.

He consulted Sharadamba for a sign, for he never undertook anything significant without getting the Mother’s permission. Two chits were placed, one in either palm of the image; the Mahaswamiji made prostrations at the feet of the Mother and waited for one chit to drop. That in the right hand was the first to drop and it indicated the wish of the Mother that the Mahaswamiji should start at an early date. Magha-shukla-panchami, Paraabhava, about February 1907, was the earliest auspicious date for the commencement of the tour and preparations for the same were immediately taken on hand.

Soon after this, the agent of the Peetham received a letter from the Private Secretary to His Highness the Maharaja of Mysore stating that it was His Highness’s intention to visit the Mahaswamiji in Sringeri before the latter set out on his journey and that he would be in Sringeri before the fifth day of the dark half of Magha and inquiring whether this would suit the Mahaswamiji’s convenience. The journey of the Mahaswamiji had already been fixed in accordance with the Command of Goddess Sharadamba for the fifth day of the bright half of Magha. So it was decided that the Mahaswamiji would set out on that day, proceed to Kigga which was the Ashrama of Vibhandaka Rishi and reside in the closeby Narasimhaparvata for a fortnight, then come to Sringeri on the way and give his Blessings to the Maharaja, who would arrive there to visit him and after that, proceed on his further tour.

The officials of the Math, as commanded by the Mahaswamiji, made all necessary preparations for the intended tour of the Mahaswamiji as well as for receiving the Maharaja in a manner befitting the dignity of the Math. The Mahaswamiji had become so accustomed to his quiet, contemplative life at Sringeri and Narasimhavana during those twelve years that he could not easily reconcile himself to the idea of parting from the Sharada shrine for a period of several years, for a tour, with a large body of followers, attendants and other servants, horses and cows, bulls and elephants, infantry and a small contingent of horsemen, materials and palanquin-bearers and all other paraphernalia of royalty meant slow marches, not more than say, ten miles at a stretch, halts at important villages on the way, long or short according to the circumstances of each case, so that the journey to and back could not be done under three to four years.

On Friday, the fifth of the bright half of Magha in the year Paraabhava S.S.1829 (1907 CE) in the auspicious moment of Abhijit Muhurta, the Mahaswamiji finished his religious duties for the day and set out from his residence in Narasimhavana with the images of Sri Shankaracharya and Sri Chandramoulishwara before him, crossed the Tunga River, went to the Adhishthana of his Guru, received his permission, went to the temple of Sri Sharada and after deeparadhana, performed his prostrations and recited some verses in a voice choked with emotion, which is worth quoting. It runs:

The following is the substance of this song: ‘You are indeed the Mother of the entire Universe; but am I not your child in a special manner? Why then do you send me away from you now? Has not my master and your devoted worshipper handed me over to you as your own true-begotten son? Why then do you now send me away from you! You brought me here from a distance, O Mother, kept me by your side a long time and guarded me safe and now you send me away. Familiarity indeed breeds contempt; but is it so between a mother and her children? I am getting old and infirm; ailments are assaulting me. I was till now passing my time happily, visiting my Guru's shrine or the shrine of Vidyatirtha (Vidyashankara) or wandering at will on the heights of Narasimhaparvata, or in the lovely solitudes of Narasimhavana or quietly meditating on the banks of the Tunga at the large place near the temple of Suryanarayana or moving about on the very long stone in front of the temple of Lord Rama on the bank of the Tunga or sitting on the fine sands of the Tunga, reciting to myself the Atmavidyavilasa of the best of Yatis (Sadashiva Brahmendra) or hearing that poem of Sri Shankaracharya, Vivekachudamani. Why then do you now send me away from you? This is the central theme of the poem.

Then the Mahaswamiji left the place with tears streaming from his eyes and continually looking back to take one more look at Goddess Sri Sharada. It has already been stated that the desire on the part of the Mahaswamiji to rebuild the temple of Sharada in stone was of long standing and that steps had been taken towards its realization. As fair progress had been made in that direction, the Mahaswamiji, when he came out of the temple after his visit to Sharadamba, laid the foundation stone of the temple, gave to the masons who had come from South India, Prasada, conveying his blessings and after seeing them commence the work, set out on his journey.

In accordance with the custom in the Math, he placed the image of Sri Shankaracharya and the metal box containing the Chandramoulishwara in the golden palanquin which had been decorated and placed near the outer gateway and walked for some distance. The inhabitants of Sringeri came there and with prostrations to the Mahaswamiji, submitted to the Mahaswamiji their feeling that Sringeri without him would be unendurable, and that they were afraid that they would not continue to enjoy in his absence, immunity from diseases and other evils. The Mahaswamiji, who could not bear the sight of distress of any kind, pacified them with his kind looks and kinder words. Many of the inhabitants begged the Mahaswamiji to enter their houses and purify them by the dust of his feet; and the Mahaswamiji went into the houses of a good many people and accepted their offerings.

That evening at 6 O’clock, he set out from Sringeri and rested the night at a village named Hulugara about two miles from Kigga in the house of Chennakeshava Rao, a person well known in the Malnad areas. The next morning, the Mahaswamiji accepted Pada-Puja, Bhiksha and other services rendered by Chennakeshava Rao as well as a donation of two thousand rupees offered by him out of his devotion for the consecration of the Kalady. The Mahaswamiji considered the unexpected gift of money as a good omen for the success of the undertaking and blessed Chennakeshava Rao. In the evening, he proceeded to Kigga and encamped there.

On the next day, the Mahaswamiji worshipped Rishyashringeshwara in the prescribed manner with offerings of clothes and ornaments and gave tirtha and Prasada to his disciples assembled there. He remained at Kigga that night. The following morning, he left Kigga and reached Narasimha Parvata, a hill situated at a distance of five miles from Kigga. There, absorbing his mind in Brahman, he became immersed in an ocean of bliss. He remained in that place till the fifth day of the dark half of Magha. On the evening of that day, he set out for Sringeri and arriving there, halted.

The next day, at nine o’clock in the morning, the Maharaja Sri Krishnaraja Wodeyar IV with the Maharani of Mysore as well as His Highness, the Yuvaraja of Mysore, arrived in Sringeri. By the command of the Mahaswamiji and in accordance with the custom, the officials of the Math and the inhabitants of the place welcomed the Royal party at the entrance to the village with great loyalty and devotion and conducted the Maharaja, seating him in a Golden palanquin to the Math. The Maharaja alighted from the palanquin at the entrance to the Math and entered the temple of Sri Sharada on foot and performed his prostrations before the Mahaswamiji who was seated in the presence of Sharadamba. He then received Prasada from the lotus hands of the Mahaswamiji. After mutual inquiries of welfare, the Maharaja took leave of the Mahaswamiji. Again, at five o’clock in the evening, the Maharaja crossed the Tunga River and proceeded to Narasimhavhana and had a private interview with the Mahaswamiji. The Maharaja expressed his appreciation of the kindness of the Mahaswamiji in having postponed his journey for his sake. The Maharaja had already issued necessary instructions to receive the Mahaswamiji in a fitting manner and look to the comforts of his camp when the latter travelled through his territory and requested the Mahaswamiji to stop for a few days at his capital on his way to Kalady.

It has already been stated that His Highness Sri Krishnaraja Wodeyar IV was born as the result of the blessings of Sri Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji, the Guru of the Mahaswamiji. The Maharaja was an unexampled combination of all that was best in Eastern and Western culture. Brought up and trained by an Englishman in the best traditions of Western culture, he yet retained a deep attachment to and reverence for the hoary ideals of ancient India; his piety was almost instinctive. His life, in the midst of all royal pomp and luxury, was simple and sanctified by sincere faith in the scriptures. Withal, as the ruler of the premier State of India, he was administering his wide dominions with a political insight and ability that are fully marvellous, initiating great reforms in consonance with modern democratic ideals yet preserving the best traditions of Indian rulership.
The Mahaswamiji blessed the Maharaja with the Upadesha of the Srividya and Shivapanchakshari mantras and presented him, for his worship, a Srichakra and a Shivalinga and also taught him the mode of their worship. The Maharaja then took leave of the Mahaswamiji humbly stating that he would await the arrival of the Mahaswamiji in his capital city of Mysore. The Mahaswamiji performed the Mahashivaratri worship in Sringeri itself. On the fifth day of the bright half of Phalguna in the year Paraabhava (1907 C.E), he continued his journey and passed through Kadur, Hassan and Tumkur districts. In these places, the officers of the Government rendered all necessary assistance to the Mahaswamiji and his entourage in a manner befitting the love and regard shown by the Maharaja towards the Mahaswamiji and earned his blessings.

A.Ramachandra Iyer, who had retired from the Judgeship of the Chief Court of Mysore and E.R. Subbaraya Iyer, a qualified and expert engineer who had been a high official of the Mysore Government and had since retired, were deputed in advance to Kalady to clear the limits of the Kalady Sanketa and build the shrines for the image of Sri Shankaracharya and that of Sharadamba. It would take two or three years for the Mahaswamiji to reach Kalady. So these two retired officials left Mysore in 1908, two years being considered sufficient for the work they had to do at Kalady.
8. On the Way to Kalady

The Mahaswamiji reached Bangalore in May 1907. Sri V.P. Madhava Rao had left Travancore and was now Dewan of Mysore. At the request of the Dewan, the Mahaswamiji stayed at his residence, Patana Bhavana, at Bangalore. This city is also known as Kalyanapuri, a name justified by its salubrious climate, being situated 3000 feet above the sea-level and its prosperous condition. Madhava Rao, A. Ramachandra Iyer and other influential gentlemen of the place requested that a shrine for installing the image of the great master Sri Shankaracharya and a Math, where the Mahaswamiji could stay for a month or two every year and preach vaidika-Dharma to the people, should be built at Bangalore.

A. Ramachandra Iyer had on an earlier occasion, made a similar suggestion and had offered to place for this purpose, his own mansion at the disposal of the Mahaswamiji. He now backed up the request of the Dewan and offered a sum of Rupees twenty thousand as his contribution. The Mahaswamiji agreed to the pressing request. The Dewan, with his characteristic promptitude, looked out for a suitable site. Between Chamarajapura and Basavangudi lay an extensive plot, overgrown with trees and shrubs and harbouring venomous reptiles. The whole plot was acquired with the permission of the Maharaja, speedily cleared of all noxious growths, was laid into house-sites with a spacious plot in the centre for the proposed shrine and Math campus. The house-sites fetched good prices; a source of nuisance to belated wayfarers was rendered fit for a growing colony and a fair shrine arose in the centre, in an incredibly short time. The Dewan placed a spacious plot adjoining the shrine at the disposal of the Mahaswamiji for the Peetham and requested the Mahaswamiji to install the image of Sri Shankaracharya in the shrine.

The Mahaswamiji installed the marble image which had been intended for Kalady in the new temple according to Vedic rites on Friday the twelfth of the bright half of Vaishakha of Plavanga; he performed the day’s worship of Sri Chandramoulishwara at the temple and distributed tirtha and Prasada to his disciples. As the Mahaswamiji had numerous disciples in Bangalore and as he had to visit them for Pada-Puja and Bhiksha in accordance with their requests, he was obliged to remain in Bangalore for a considerable length of time. From Bangalore, the Mahaswamiji travelled through Bidadi, Clorepal and Chennapatna, and reached Mysore on Sunday, the fifth of the bright half of Jyeshta of the year Plavanga.

There he was received by the Maharaja of Mysore with exceptional honours and later took up his residence in the Sanskrit College building. On Friday, the tenth of the dark half of Jyeshta, he visited the palace again at the request of the Maharaja, performed the worship of Chandramouleeshwara and other deities in the palace, accepted the Pada-Puja performed by the Maharaja in accordance with the established custom and blessed the Maharaja and other members of the Royal family. Although he had intended to return to his lodgings after these ceremonies were over, he remained the whole day in the palace at the request of Maharaja and returned to his camp late at night, after performing the evening worship. As the time for Chaturmasya-Sankalpa was drawing near and as the journey he had undertaken was a prolonged and arduous one, he was able to remain in Mysore only for thirteen days.

On a certain day at about 5 O’clock in the evening, some Mohammedan gentlemen of respectability and learning came to see him. The Mahaswamiji inquired of their welfare and began to explain the truths of various religions and the reasons for their differences. The enthusiasm of the Mahaswamiji grew as he saw the delight with which they followed his explanations given in a simple and reasonable manner.

After blessing the Maharaja and his other disciples, the Mahaswamiji left Mysore for Nanjangud. He spent three days in Nanjangud worshipping Srikantheswara and then descending the ghats through Chamarajanagar, he reached Satyamangalam in the Coimbatore district of Madras presidency.

He performed Vyasa-Puja and Chaturmasya-Sankalpa
as well as the Navaratri worship in Gopichettipalayam, which is an Agrahara situated about fifteen miles from Satyamangalam. Travelling via Bhavani, Erode and Karur and spending a day or two at the request of his disciples and blessing them, he entered Jambukeswara (Thiruvanaikoil) near Trichirapalli.

While the Mahaswamiji was in Gopichettipalayam for his Chaturmasya-Sankalpa, one of his disciples named Kanadukattan Chidambaram Chettiar, who belonged to the class of Nattu-kottai Chettiars, had come there to visit him. He represented to the Mahaswamiji that he had renovated the temple of Sri Jambukeswara and Akhilandeswari and requested the Mahaswamiji to be so gracious as to be present in Jambukeswara at the time of the consecration of the temple and the Kumbhabhishekha ceremony. The Mahaswamiji therefore visited Jambukeswara and remained there till the Kumbhabhishekam ceremony was over, had the Darshan of Sri Jambukeswara and Sri Akhilandeswari and prayed at the shrines for the welfare of the world. He then blessed his disciple Chidambara Chettiar. Seeing how skillfully the temple had been renovated, the Mahaswamiji asked Chidambaram Chettiar to supervise and complete the renovation which the Mahaswamiji had inaugurated at the temple of Sharadamba at Sringeri, which task the Chettiar gladly accepted.

The Mahaswamiji then resumed his journey and arrived at Srirangam. He remained there only for one day, taking up his residence in the house of his beloved disciple T.K. Balasubramanyam. That night, after the performance of the evening worship, the Mahaswamiji went on foot to the temple of Sri Ranganatha and offered his prayers and prostrations to the deity in the quiet of the night, after the usual closing time of the temple, in great happiness and returned to his lodgings.

On the next morning, he left for Tiruchirapalli, where he accepted Pada-Puja and Bhiksha from his beloved disciple Ganapati Iyer and took up his residence for the night in the house of Krishna Iyer. He then stopped at Pudukkottai, the capital of the Thondaimans (Chieftains ruling certain parts of Southern India), which as the Mahaswamiji declared, had been sanctified by the footprints of Saint Sadashiva Brahmendra, who was the Mahaswamiji’s ideal of a perfected yogi. Then he travelled to Kovilur. The head of the Math at Kovilur by name Veerappa Desikar, who had prayed his respects to the Mahaswamiji on the occasion of his previous visit to the place in 1893-94, had now rebuilt a temple of Shiva and requested the Mahaswamiji to visit Kovilur for the consecration of the temple and the Kumbhabhishekam ceremony; the Mahaswamiji accepted the invitation and proceeded to Kovilur.

After the Kumbhabhishekha ceremony, the Jagadguru remained in Kovilur for five days, celebrated Shankara-Jayanti with great pomp, accepted the hospitalities of the Kovilur Swami and then travelled on to places like Karaikudi, Kanadukaathan, Pullattur, Kottaiyur and Devakottai where the well known Nattu-kottai Chettiar reside. The Mahaswamiji thus gave them the happiness of beholding the worship of the deities and bestowed on them his choicest blessings.

As the time for Chaturmasya-Sankalpa of the year Kilaka was drawing near, the Mahaswamiji remained for two months in Kunnakudi and performed his Vyasapuja in that place. Subsequently, He proceeded to Madurai, which is known as the Halasya-kshetra. He was accommodated in accordance with the established custom in the Kalyana Mantapa, a part of the famous Meenakshi Sundareswara temple and remained there for twenty five days. He then travelled on to Tribhuvana, Manamadurai and Paramakudi and reached Ramanathapuram where he stayed for two days and blessed the Setupati Muthulinga Rajarajeswara, the Zamindar of that place who was the son and successor of the Raja who had assigned five of his villages to the Sringeri Sharada Peetham.

Then, he crossed Pamban in a boat and reached Rameshwaram on Wednesday, the eleventh of the bright half of Kartika of Kilaka S.S. 1831 (1908 C.E). He remained for three days in Dhanushkoti, bathed at the bridge of Rama and returned to Rameshwaram. There, he worshipped Ramanatha Swami with silver coins and offered valuable clothes as gifts and remained for two weeks accepting the hospitality of his disciples in that locality and showering his blessings on them.
He then left Rameshwaram and entered the district of Tirunelveli, on the Banks of the River Tamraparni. In this district, there are numerous Agraharas. The people there are devoted followers of the Sringeri Math. Having come to learn that the Mahaswamiji was journeying to Kalady to consecrate the birth place of Sri Shankara Bhagavatpada, they considered it their duty to show their hospitality to the Mahaswamiji on such an exceptional occasion and became participators in the good work in which the Mahaswamiji was engaged. With great enthusiasm, they invited the Mahaswamiji to visit village after village in their district, extended their hospitality to him and offered princely donations. The Mahaswamiji, appreciating the zeal and devotion of his disciples, ordered that all the money collected there should be set apart for the erection of the buildings and Kumbhabhishekha at Kalady; a sum of two lakhs of rupees collected in that locality was deposited with some prominent disciples of the Math, who were residing in that place, as a reserve from which funds might be drawn as and when necessity arose.

A year had passed by and by this time, the next Chaturmasya was approaching. It being an intercalary year, three instead of the usual two months stay at one place for the Chaturmasya was necessary. Owing to constant travelling and living in the midst of crowds, the Mahaswamiji required solitude. The Mahaswamiji chose Papanasam for Chaturmasya. Nearby is the famous waterfall of the Tamraparni, known as Kalyanatirtha. The scenery here is grand and bewitching; here the Tamraparni flows in a pellucid stream of molten gold, skirted on either side by gigantic trees. By the side of the stream, is a holy temple of Shiva. The spot is enchantingly lovely and its solitude and loveliness were congenial to the Mahaswamiji’s temperament and meditative habits. Thereafter, he proceeded to the hills of Banatirtha at the invitation of the Tirthapati Zamindar of Singampatti. He spent three days at Banatirtha, the source of Tamraparni, on the hills of the Western Ghats.

The Mahaswamiji then proceeded to Tirunelveli at the request of its citizens to celebrate the Navarathri festival in that place. He took up his residence in the temple of Salivateswara and his disciples facilitated the conduct of the celebrations of Navarathri in a grand style and became the recipients of the Mahaswamiji’s bountiful blessings.

When the Maharaja of Travancore, His Highness Padmanabha-Dasa Sri Moolam Tirunal Bala Rama Varma came to know that the Mahaswamiji was coming into his territories for the sake of fulfilling a great purpose, he issued orders to his officers to afford to him all conveniences from the moment the Mahaswamiji entered his territories and to receive him with highest honours when he arrived there. The Maharaja also requested the Mahaswamiji to visit his capital city on a day suited to the star on which the Maharaja was born, in the month of Margashirsha of the year Soumya S.S. 1832 (1909 CE). The Mahaswamiji acquiesced to the request of the Maharaja for entering Trivanantapuram on that day though it was not going to be convenient to him due to shortage of time. Tovalakkote was the first place of his halt in the territory of Travancore. When the Mahaswamiji arrived there, he was received by the Dewan Peshkar of Padmanabhapuram and was accommodated in a palatial building.

The Mahaswamiji went from there to Kanyakumari and remained there for three days, beheld Goddess Kanyakumari and travelling further, he reached Trivandrum at five O’clock on the morning of the appointed day and encamped at a place on the banks of the river at a distance of about two miles from the town. Before the Mahaswamiji could finish his religious observances of the morning, the Dewan and the other high officers of the State and the principal citizens had assembled and were in readiness with all royal insignia, elephants, poornakumbham, fruits and flowers to receive the Mahaswamiji. After finishing his religious duties, the Mahaswamiji donned his crown of gems and other Math regalia and came forward to enter his golden palanquin. Seeing that it was impossible for him to receive individually the huge concourse of people who had been waiting to have a glimpse of his Darshan, the Mahaswamiji informed the Dewan Rajagopalachari that the people could pay their respects mentally after he entered his palanquin and sat in it.

The officers of the state offered suitable explanations to the people and brought the crowd under control and gave everyone an opportunity of beholding the Mahaswamiji.
While the Mahaswamiji’s procession was proceeding along the appointed streets, both the sides of the streets were lined with ladies waving Arati. Before the Mahaswamiji arrived at the entrance of the fort, the Maharaja, decorated in gorgeous apparel, was waiting with a small select retinue. As soon as the palanquin came near the outer gateway, the Maharaja came out of the fort, offered his prostrations and with folded hands made enquiries regarding the welfare of the Mahaswamiji. The Mahaswamiji was delighted at the love and devotion shown by the Maharaja and after inquiries of mutual welfare, gave phala and Mantrakshata to the Maharaja and blessed him. The Maharaja then took leave of the Mahaswamiji who then entered the fort and passed in procession through the four principal streets and after the Dhuli-Pada-Puja and other services had been offered in the Yuvaraja’s palace which had been fitted up for his reception, accorded his permission to the officers and citizens who had accompanied him to return to their homes. Thereafter, the Mahaswamiji performed his midday religious ceremonies.

The Mahaswamiji remained in Trivandrum for eight days. The arrangements made by the Maharaja for the convenience of the Mahaswamiji were excellent. On a certain day, the Maharaja came to the Mahaswamiji’s place of residence, received Mantropadesha from him and also made a gift of ten thousand rupees as offering to the Mahaswamiji. When the Maharaja represented to the Mahaswamiji that he was growing old and regretted that in his state there was no one on whom he could confer the office of Yuvaraja, a heir apparent, the Mahaswamiji blessed the Maharaja saying that he would soon find a heir apparent and that the Maharaja would confer the office on the selected person with his own hands. That afternoon, the Maharaja was pleased to say that he fully entertained the belief that the Mahaswamiji was no other than Sri Padmanabha, the titular deity of the Royal family, and that as he possessed the blessings of such a Mahaswamiji, no evil could happen to him.

On the next day, the Maharaja sent the Maharani to visit the Mahaswamiji and receive his blessings. Her Highness too had the happiness of beholding the Mahaswamiji and became the recipient of his invaluable blessings. The Maharani received Upadesha from him and had his portrait painted by one of the artists in the state. The portrait is now preserved in the Shankara Math at Bangalore in commemoration of the Mahaswamiji. When the Mahaswamiji was in Trivandrum, a large number of his disciples in that place tried to invite the Mahaswamiji to their houses to serve him with Pada-Puja and other forms of worship and to earn his blessings; but as the Maharaja deemed that, it would cause inconvenience to the Mahaswamiji, he directed that devotees could come to the Math and worship the Mahaswamiji and receive his blessings. The Maharaja submitted to the Mahaswamiji that he considered it his good fortune that the Mahaswamiji had undertaken the great task of consecrating the temples at Kalady during his lifetime, as he was glad that he could also associate himself with it. He also expressed his readiness to provide all facilities for the purpose and made a gift to the Mahaswamiji of a further sum of ten thousand rupees and an elephant named Padmanabha. The Mahaswamiji showered his blessings on the Maharaja, his followers as well as on the inhabitants of the place and proceeded towards Kalady.
9. The Great Consecration at Kalady

Sri Ramachandra Iyer who had been deputed by the Mahaswamiji for supervising the clearance of the forest land at Kalady and the construction of the temple there accomplished the work in two years with the support of an Engineer Sri E. R. Subbaraya Iyer. At first, it was the Mahaswamiji’s intention to erect only one temple and install the image of Sri Shankara Bhagavatpada in it. Then, as though inspired by Sri Shankara Bhagavatpada himself who showed even after his renunciation of the world, his love and reverence for his mother, the Mahaswamiji decided that another temple should be built and the idol of Divine Mother Goddess Sri Sharadamba should be installed in it. Ramachandra Iyer was informed of this.

Two shrines, compact, strong and beautiful, were constructed in accordance to the designs furnished by Sri E.R. Subbaraya Iyer under the direction of the Mahaswamiji. Both these temples stand on the north bank of the Purna River and face south. As the Purna River flows between the high river banks, a beautiful and broad flight of thirty two steps made of granite slabs was built at considerable expense. To the east of the temples and outside of their enclosure, a house was built for the residence of the Mahaswamiji and the accommodation of visitors. Sri Ramachandra Iyer was able to complete the two temples and the Math house before the Mahaswamiji arrived at Kalady while the agent arrived in advance to make preparations for the Kumbhabhishekam ceremony.

Kalady was then a small and thinly populated village. It was in a corner of Travancore and there were no large villages surrounding it either. In these circumstances, one can easily imagine the difficulties one would experience in making suitable arrangements for the reception of such a large concourse of people as would come there to attend the Kumbhabhishekam ceremony. However, by the blessings of the Mahaswamiji, some three hundred labourers from Kallidaikurichi in Tirunvelveli district came over to help the cause and so they stayed in Kalady for this purpose. To supervise the work of these men, there were others who also came from the same place. The money required for the work had already been collected and was held in readiness at Tirunelveli.

For the accommodation of the thousands of visitors to the shrine who were expected at the time of consecration, six hundred temporary lodgings were put up in rows, with paths between. Lodgings of a comparatively more permanent kind were arranged for respectable officials and other gentlemen who were expected to come. The Sanitary Commissioner of the Travancore State, the District Medical Officer, Police officials, the officials of the Postal Department were all there in time to see that the sanitary and other arrangements made for the comfort of the crowd of expected visitors were satisfactory. The Peshkar of Kottayam division was also there with his subordinates; all the lodgings were provided with cooking and vessels needed for the use of the occupants; provisions and other materials were stocked on a liberal scale. Persons were deputed to receive visitors at the Railway station and to provide conveyances for them to proceed to Kalady as well as to provide them with accommodation and food supplies after their arrival at Kalady.

The twelfth day of the bright half of Magha, in the year Soumya (February, 1910 C.E), was fixed for the Kumbhabhishekam ceremony and invitations were issued to all the disciples of the Math as well as to the heads of various other Maths and the Maharajas. About one hundred of the Mahaswamiji’s disciples who were students, lawyers and others had arrived in Kalady and held themselves in readiness to serve as volunteers of various ranks and grades.

The Mahaswamiji, travelling by the appointed route, came and encamped at a village called Perumbavur on the Southern bank of the Purna River at a distance of five miles from Kalady. That night, while the Mahaswamiji was sleeping, he dreamt that he saw a widow clad in white. When inquiries were made regarding her identity and place of abode, she smiled and replied that she lived underneath a tree and had come to invite the Mahaswamiji to Kalady and then she disappeared. The Mahaswamiji woke up and however hard he tried to interpret this dream, he failed to find an explanation. On the afternoon of the next day, Mr. Ramachandra Iyer and the agent went from Kalady to Perumbavur and reported to the Mahaswamiji that all the arrangements were complete. The Mahaswamiji, without concerning himself with any other matter, began to ask questions regarding the topography of Kalady and the site on which the temples of Sri Sharada and Sri Shankara Bhagavatpada were built.

As directed by the Mahaswamiji, the agent gave a detailed description of the shrines, the Math and other sites. In the course of the description, the agent stated that near the shrine of Sharadamba, there was an Asoka tree, under which, it was stated, the mother of the great teacher Shankara Bhagavatpada had been cremated; that people from the surrounding parts used to circumambulate the tree and make prostrations and light lamps. When the agent was relating this, the Mahaswamiji fell into an ecstasy; his eyes were brimming with tears; his body was in a tremor. With a voice choked with emotion, he began to recite verses in praise of Shankara Bhagavatpada’s mother. Not knowing the cause of this sudden emotion, the people about him stood spellbound.

After a while, the Mahaswamiji came to himself and said that on the first night of his arrival at Perumbavur, an elderly widow, dressed in white, appeared before him in a dream and when questioned, she stated that she was living under a tree at Kalady and with a winning smile added that she now appeared to welcome him to the place. The Mahaswamiji felt great joy at having been invited by the mother of the great Shankara Bhagavatpada to enter Kalady. He was satisfied with the arrangements that had been made for the ceremonies and informed the agent and Sri Ramachandra Iyer that he would be in Kalady the next morning and gave them leave to return to Kalady.

At eight O’clock in the morning of the Shuklapaksha Dvitiya Magha, ten days before the date appointed for the consecration, the Mahaswamiji arrived at Kalady. As soon as he crossed the Purna River and came to the north bank, he went in a Pradakshina (circumambulation) round the spot where the Shankara Bhagavatpada’s mother was cremated and performed his prostration and stood there for some time contemplating in his mind the glorious life of the great Shankara Bhagavatpada. He then proceeded to his place of residence. After his bath and the daily religious observances were over, he came out at about four O’clock in the evening and inspected the arrangements. He saw the temples ready for the installation, the rows of cottages intended to serve as places of residence for his disciples who would come to witness the ceremonies, the collections of food grains and other articles intended for the feasting of people and the lighting arrangements and being satisfied, returned to his lodgings. He complimented his followers saying that by the blessings of Sri Shankarabhagavatpada, all the arrangements were more satisfactory than he had expected and that he firmly believed that the forthcoming function was going to be a great success.

An extensive Yagna-Mantapa (the enclosure for the Vedic rituals) had been erected between the two temples for the performance of the sacrifices in connection with the installations. Pundits and Ritwiks (priests) had arrived from Sringeri and Mysore. For the supervision of these ceremonies were deputed Kunigal Rama Shastri, the Math Pundit, Dharmasila Krishnaswamy Iyer of Tirunelveli District and others. Images of Sri Sharadamba and Sri Shankarabhabhagavatpada made of panchaloha (an alloy of five metals) in Karaikudi in exact resemblance of the images in the Sringeri Math had already arrived. The stone images of the seven Goddesses (Brahmi, Maheshwari, Kaumari, Vaishnavi, Vaarahi, Indrani and Chamunda) intended to decorate the outside walls of the shrine of Goddesss Sharadamba were also ready. The gilt turrets procured from Tirunelveli through Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer were also in readiness.

On the morning of Monday, the fifth of the bright half of Magha, the Mahaswamiji came into the sacrificial enclosure and beheld the commencement of the sacrifices. The Mahaswamiji instructed the Pundits and the Ritwiks to perform all the rites as prescribed in the scriptures to earn the blessings of the almighty and the Adi-guru (the first preceptor) Shankara Bhagavatpada. After blessing the disciples, he returned to his abode.

From that day onwards, the various ceremonies such as Jaladhivasa, Dhanyadhivasa and Shayyadhivasa (certain preparatory rituals for the idols before they are consecrated) and the various sacrifices were conducted for seven nights and the ceremony of the installation of the images was performed in the Abhijin-Muhurta on Monday, the Magha-Shukla-Dwadashi (twelfth of the bright half of Magha), of the year Soumya, (21st February 1910 C.E). After the installation was over, the Mahaswamiji came to the temples and after worshipping the idols, distributed Prasada to the assembled disciples and blessed them.

To witness the ceremony, the disciples of the Mahaswamiji, some fifty thousand in number from all over the country, had assembled at Kalady. The feeding of the devotees took place from 8 o’clock in the morning till 2 o’clock in the afternoon. At four o’clock in the evening, the Mahaswamiji took his seat in the extensive courtyard in front of the Math and expounded the nature of Dharma, the modes of observing Dharma and the benefits that accrued from it, the greatness of Sri Shankara Bhagavatpada, the blessings conferred on the world by him and related matters to the huge gathering. He also pointed out that as it was for the welfare of the world that he had undertaken the installation of the images, it behoved his disciples to visit the place from time to time and purify their minds by beholding the worship of the images and earn their salvation.

The Swami thanked A. Ramachandra Iyer and his expert assistant E. R. Subbaraya Iyer for their untiring and dispassionate work in making the whole thing go off so splendidly and showered his blessings on them. The former, he honoured with the title of Guru-Bhakta-Kesari.
Sri T.K. Balasubrahmanyam of the Sri Vani Vilas Press, Srirangam, who had spent a fortune on the deluxe
Edition of Sri Shankara Bhagavatpada’s works had ten volumes ready on this occasion and placed them in the presence of the Mahaswamiji, who blessed him with the title of Guru-Bhakta-Shikhamani and hoped that the remaining ten volumes would soon be published for the benefit of the mankind.

The audience in the front hall of the Math was grand and was suitable to the memorable occasion. Among those assembled there on that day were head of the Shivaganga
Math Sri Subrahmanyabhinava Sacchidananda Bharati Swami, Sri V.P. Madhava Rao, retired Dewan of Travancore, Sri P. Rajagopalachari, the Dewan of Travancore, Sri H.V.Nanjundayya, Member of the State council, Mysore, Mahamahopadyaya Hari Shastri and many other prominent persons. After the task on which the Mahaswamiji had embarked was completed, all the learned men who had come there were rewarded with gifts suited to their learning and position in life and all the poor people who had assembled were liberally fed and given gifts of money and clothes. And after receiving Tirtha and Prasada, the devotees dispersed.

In order that the installed images may be fully endowed with divine power and an example of devotion may be set to his disciples, the Mahaswamiji remained in
The Maharaja of Cochin visited Kalady during this period, beheld the image of the Sri Shankarabhagavatpada, worshipped the Mahaswamiji and obtained his blessings. He was a very great Sanskrit scholar; in Logic and Vedanta he could exchange swords - the sword of the tongue - with the greatest pundits of the day; in the presence of the Mahaswamiji, he held learned disputations with the pundits of the Math; the Mahaswamiji, Himself an eminent scholar in Vedas and Shastras, presided with joy and electrified the audience with his learned discussions and illuminating discourses.

Sri Krishnaraja Wodeyar IV, Maharaja of Mysore, a devoted disciple of the Mahaswamiji came with a small and select retinue to have darshan of the newly consecrated temple of Sri Shankara Bhagavatpada as well as to see the Mahaswamiji. His Highness presented the deities with valuable cloths and jewels. He remained for three days as the guest of the Math. The Mahaswamiji blessed the Maharaja with the title ‘Dharma-mula’. Receiving the blessings of the Mahaswamiji, he left for his dominions. Many other disciples of the Mahaswamiji came to him when he was residing in the solitude of Kalady and became the recipients of his blessings. The place was improved from day to day by the indefatigable exertions of Ramachandra Iyer; a school for advanced studies in Sanskrit was started. The Mahaswamiji set out on his return journey to Sringeri.

After leaving Kalady, the Mahaswamiji entered Cochin and at the request of Sri P.R. Sundara Iyer, High court Judge of Madras, proceeded to the latter’s native place named Pudukode and remained there for five days. Having celebrated the Shankara-Jayanti in Pudukode, he went to the city of Coimbatore and from there, to Namakkal. He reached Ayyampalayam on the banks of the Cauvery for his Chaturmasya-Sankalpa of the year Sadharana.

The Mahaswamiji had arrived at Ayyampalayam on the Krishnapaksha Dwadashi of Magha of the year Plavanga, in the earlier part of his present tour and had remained here for one month. Thandavaraya Pillai, a Mirasdar, was a great devotee of the Mahaswamiji, as has already been stated. An image of Sri Shankara Bhagavatpada was installed within the campus of the temple of Sri Subrahmanya Swami at the request of Tandavaraya Pillai and on Krishnapaksha Ekadasi of Phalguna, on which day the Mahaswamiji completed his fiftieth year, at the request of Thandavaraya Pillai and with the permission of the Mahaswamiji, the agent Sri Srikantha Shastri installed an image of the Mahaswamiji Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Narasimha Bharati to the right of the image of Sri Shankara Bhagavatpada. The Mahaswamiji completed his Chaturmasya-Sankalpa in that place and having conferred the title of ‘Bhaktaratnam’ on Thandavaraya Pillai, he travelled by way of Salem, Dharmapuri and Krishnagiri and entered the Kolar District of Mysore state.

Many years had elapsed since the Mahaswamiji last visited the district of Kolar. Sri C. Srikantheswara Iyer was now the Deputy Commissioner having been a trusted lieutenant of the famous Dewan K. Seshadri Iyer. Srikantheswara Iyer induced the Mahaswamiji to remain for forty six days in his district and served him with great zeal and earned his blessings. The Mahaswamiji appeared to be anxious to visit the Nandi hills which he had once seen in company with his Guru. The Mahaswamiji was one who always liked to wander freely whenever he came to a hill or a forest. When he was on the Nandi hills, he wished to bathe in the lake known as Amritasarovar. He plunged in to the waters of the Amritasarovar, cool and inviting after the heat of the plains; he sat for a long-while, exposed to the cold wind, absorbed in meditation helped by the solitude, and the charming scenery and he returned to his camp only in the evening. The exposure brought severe cold with a pain in the chest which troubled him all the night; but by Ishwara’s grace, the illness passed away soon. The Mahaswamiji returned to Chikballapur and after resting there for some time, he left that place for Bangalore.

The construction of the Math building in Bangalore which was commenced in the year Kilaka (1907 C.E), was now complete. The Mahaswamiji entered the city of Bangalore, escorted by the officers of Government and the citizens with great pomp and came to the entrance of the Math which was a grand and imposing structure. Having sent the sacred images of Chandramoulishwara and Sri Shankara Bhagavatpada in advance into the Math, he visited the temple of Sri Shankara Bhagavatpada situated outside the Math and then entered the Math building. After Dhuli-Padapuja and other services had been performed, the Mahaswamiji gave phala and Mantrakshata to all who had assembled. He then went over the building with Sri V.P. Madhava Rao, under whose auspices it had been planned and built, and he expressed his great satisfaction with the Dewan for his foresight and promptitude.

The Maharaja of Mysore was waiting at Bangalore to pay his respects again to the Mahaswamiji and at the invitation of the Mahaswamiji, the Maharaja and the members of his family were entertained in the newly built Math. They performed Pada-Puja, received tirtha and Prasada from the Mahaswamiji and they left for the palace with the Mahaswamiji’s blessings. On the Shuklapaksha Chaturthi of Magha, of the year Sadharana, S.S.1833 (3rd February, 1911), the Mahaswamiji sent for the Maharaja and a few high officials and told them that his idea in building the Math was to make it the centre of advanced Sanskrit studies and establish a Sanskrit College under the title of ‘Bharatiya Girvana Praudha Vidya Abhivardhani Pathashala’ where, in course of time, provision could be made for boarding and educating, free, fifty advanced students in the Purva and the Uttara Mimamsas and that a start would soon be made with eight advanced students and two teacher pundits. Sri V.P. Madhava Rao, the Dewan, who had built a row of seven houses near the Math and fitted them up with the necessary things, now placed the block at the disposal of the Swami for the residence of the students.

The Mahaswamiji was greatly pleased with the offer and accepted it, conveying his blessings for the Dewan. The Mahaswamiji pointed out that though the duty of carrying out these aims really rested on the Maharaja as well as on wealthy and charitable people, the Math had resolved to devote a portion of its annual income towards the object and when good results had been shown, charitable persons might then come forward to place the institution on a permanent basis. The Maharaja and the other disciples of the Mahaswamiji who had assembled there expressed their gratitude to the Mahaswamiji for the encouragement he was giving to Sanskrit learning and took leave of the Mahaswamiji.

The Mahaswamiji remained in Bangalore for thirteen days and then set out for Sringeri. Travelling by rapid marches, he arrived at Malekal. While camping at Malekal, news came that the new building in the course of construction for Sharadamba at Sringeri had caught fire accidentally; the stone pillars were broken down and there was great loss, though the image of Sharadamba which was housed in an adjoining wooden Mantapa (enclosure) was intact. The agent and others were greatly perturbed at the news, but the Mahaswamiji’s only feeling was that the fire had not the power to touch the image.

The Mahaswamiji resumed his journey and travelling through Jarikere, Shimoga and Tirthahalli, reached Sringeri at about 9 o’clock on the morning of Krishnapaksha Dwitiya of Phalgun of the year Sadharana (March 1911). He went round the four streets of Sringeri in Pradakshina, entered the temple of Sharada, paid his adorations to the deity and praised her greatness in the following extempore stanza:

\begin{align*}
\text{प्रोक्तं केनागमान्ते किमु परममहःसत्सिद्धं स्वसवकार्या—} \\
\text{शक्ति देवा वभूवः शुचिपवनमुखः इत्युमु मुरुयमर्थम्।} \\
\text{जानक्तात्माध्विनश्वा इति विधिरमणी दारुवेगेण्य स्थितासी—} \\
\text{ज्वालामालाकुलेःसमिन्तुमकसनयुता दाहगम्येन शून्या।} \end{align*}

(Has it not been said in the Kena Upanishad that the gods, Agni, Vayu and others were unable to exercise their power in the presence of the great Light (Brahman)? It is no wonder then, that You (Sharadamba) stood unscathed with garland and dress intact, in the wooden shrine, though surrounded by flames all round to teach Your disciples this great truth.)

He then visited the Adhishthanam (temple) of his Guru and entering into to the temple of Sri Vidyashankara, he prostrated himself before him. He then accepted the Dhuli-Padapuja offered by the people and leaving all the paraphernalia of the Math, left for the Narasimhavana, his favourite woods nearby, on the other side of the Tunga with a small number of followers and resumed his quiet, meditative life there. He was now in his elements, after four years of unremitting camp life, visits of an unceasing flow of devotees, lectures and public discourses. He felt like one who had been incarcerated in the jail and unexpectedly restored to freedom. Only his constant and devoted attendants, Sri Srikantha Shastri and Dharmadhikari Kunigal Rama Shastri (alias Krishna Shastri) could gauge the depth of the Mahaswamiji's feeling now and the peace that came to the mahatma in his favourite and charming retreat.
10. Videhamukti

The Mahaswamiji deputed Sri Kunigal Rama Shastri, Dharmadhikari, to Bangalore to inaugurate the Sanskrit College there on the auspicious day of Shankara-Jayanti, Vaishakha shukla panchami. The Shastri accordingly went to Bangalore and the College was opened under the presidency of Sri P.N. Krishnamurthi, Sri V.P. Madhava Rao and a few high officials of the State being present. The College opened with eight students for the advanced studies in Purva and Uttara Mimamsa; each student was given a stipend of Rs.20/- a month and free quarters. Two teachers selected by the Mahaswamiji from the pundits of the Math were appointed as professors; the course of studies embraced a period of eight years.

Ever since his return from the Kalady tour, the Swami was suffering from bronchial trouble during the cold season. On the Shuklapaksha Saptami of Magha in

1 It may be incidentally mentioned here that of the first batch of eight students, seven came out successful in the final examination, held under the auspices of Jagadguru Sri Chandrashekhara Bharati Mahaswamiji, with the help of eminent pundits during the Navaratri festival in the year Siddharthi (1919) and were awarded the title of Pandita-pravara and received shawls and gold chains and certificates in recognition of their proficiency. Three of them became Pundits in the Sringeri Math; one became a professor in the Sanskrit College, Mylapore; one a teacher in the Sanskrit school at Puducode, established by the late Justice P.R. Sundara Iyer, one a Pundit in the Government Library Mysore; and the seventh a teacher in a Sanskrit Patashala, established at Chittoor, Cochin State, by Sri Dharmasila Krishna Iyer.
Virodhikrit (Friday, 26th January, 1912) the Mahaswamiji showed symptoms of coughing. It appeared as though the ailment now was no worse than in the previous years. But the cough began to increase. The ailment, instead of lessening with time, began to give him more and more trouble. There were other things also to disturb his mind.

The heterodox habits of life, against which he had been fighting abroad, now invaded the very Agrahara of Sringeri. Morning ablutions and prayers, the old simple ways, Vedic studies and observances, were all slowly getting neglected. The Swami felt that his efforts to restore the old usages were failing in their purpose; he had created the shrine of the great teacher and had surrendered his further responsibilities to a higher spiritual being. He could do nothing more. A stanza out of the hymn he composed at this period shows what he was feeling:

कि पाठयेयं लघुचंद्रिकां वा कि वा त्यज्येयं सकल्प्रपञ्चम् ।
स्मप्रेयं मे ब्रूहि किमत्र कार्यं डोलायित मामकमम्ब चेतं ॥

(Should I teach the Laghucandrika (an advanced Advaitic text) or should I give up everything? My mind is confused. Mother, tell me today in a dream what I should do.)

One thing remained to be done; a successor to the Peetham had to be appointed before he could quit the body. For several years past, he had his eye on a promising youth at Sringeri. The sole surviving son out of thirteen children of his parents, the boy was very intelligent and well-behaved; he had passed out of the elementary school and was a student of the Sirkar English School established at Sringeri, when he came under the notice of Sri Srikantha Shastri, the keen-eyed agent of the Math. The agent reported the matter to the Mahaswamiji, as his habit was; the master had said that such promising boys should be made to study Sanskrit and be brought up in vaidika ways.

The boy was accordingly transferred to the Sanskrit School at Sringeri, which was maintained by the Math. He came of a learned family, his grand-father having been an eminent Vyakarana (grammar) Pundit, who was living a quiet, simple and pious life in the north and who had been brought and entertained by the previous Mahaswamiji as a Pundit of the Math. The Mahaswamiji used to visit the Sanskrit school at Sringeri once a year and examine the boys himself and encourage the deserving among them. On one such occasion, the Mahaswamiji marked the smartness, the prompt replies and the modest deportment of this lad, gave him presents and asked the agent to have his particular eye on him and have him trained in Logic and other higher Sanskrit studies. The boy’s name was Narasimha Shastri.

That the Mahaswamiji was keeping this lad steadily in his mind, with an eye to his nomination to the Peetham in due time is seen from a poem, in which the burden was:

> सर्वेष्ठ श्रीनृसिंहं कुरु शिवदयिते सत्वरं महिन्नग्रम।
> (O beloved of Shiva, quickly make Nrisimha, a pupil devoted to me, omniscient.)
All these had happened before the Mahaswamiji started on his Kalady tour. After his return to Sringeri, he examined the youth and found that he had made great progress in his Tarka studies, that he was scrupulously observing the disciplines of Brahmacharya - the early ablutions and prayers and the daily homage to the sanctified fire. The Mahaswamiji then sent the youth to the Math’s College at Bangalore Bharatiya Girvna-Praudha-Vidya-abhvirdhini Pathashala to study Purva-Mimamsa, as a preliminary to the study of Vedanta.

Taking into consideration of his own deteriorating health in early 1912, the Mahaswamiji wished to carry out the decision that he had arrived at a few years back. The Mahaswamiji had already decided that Sri Narasimha Shastri was the most eligible candidate to ascend the Peetham and wished to confer Sannyasa on him immediately. He sent Kunigal Rama Shastri to Mysore to acquaint the Maharaja with his wishes and to introduce Sri Narasimha Shastri to His Highness. Rama Shastri accordingly went to Bangalore and learning that the Maharaja was there, presented himself before His Highness and acquainted him with the Mahaswamiji’s wishes. The Maharaja was grieved to hear the Mahaswamiji’s ill-health and expressed his readiness to act in accordance with the Mahaswamiji’s wishes in every respect.

Meanwhile the end was drawing near. On the full moon day of Phalguna (Sunday 3rd March, 1912), when the Mahaswamiji bathed in the Tunga River and the cold plunge brought on a rheumatic attack, the Mahaswamiji was unable to walk erect.

Just at this time, Dr. P.S. Achyuta Rao, a senior surgeon from Mysore came to Sringeri in the course of his tours. Dr. Achyuta Rao had great regard and love for the Mahaswamiji. Moreover, he had already known the physical constitution of the Mahaswamiji, having attended him on some previous occasions of illness. He treated the Mahaswamiji for two or three days and Mahaswamiji's health improved; but the cough did not leave him. Dr. Achyuta Rao gave some hints of the serious nature of the illness. Before he left Sringeri on the night of the Trayodashi of Krishnapaksha of Phalguna (Saturday, 16th March, 1912), when the Mahaswamiji retired for the day, the cough started to trouble him at 10 o’clock and continued till 1 o’clock.

On the next day, the urgency to adopt a disciple and successor in accordance with the Mahaswamiji’s intention was felt. The Mahaswamiji gave instructions to the agent to write to Kunigal Rama Shastri that he should acquaint the Maharaja immediately with the facts and bring to Narasimha Shastri from Bangalore, where he was studying the Shastras. A letter was accordingly written to Kunigal Rama Shastri explaining fully the conditions of the Mahaswamiji’s bodily health and dispatched by means of a messenger.

On the new moon day of Phalguna (Monday 18th March, 1912) the agent who was in a conversation with the Mahaswamiji, suggested that though a message had been sent to Dharmadhikari Rama Shastri to fetch Narasimha Shastri urgently, still it would take three days for the Dharmadhikari to return. Would it not be better that a successor should be nominated at once, from among the suitable candidates at Sringeri itself? The Mahaswamiji inquired whether there was any one worthy of being selected for the place. The names of three persons were suggested. One of them was rejected as not being likely to become very learned; another was discarded as not up to the mark in character, with the observation that it was better to leave the holy seat of Sringeri unfilled than to appoint such a successor. The third was passed over in silence. The Mahaswamiji finally said, “Kunigal Rama Shastri will bring Narasimha Shastri. Is it not? Well then, let him come.” He then commanded the agent to recite his favourable poem of Atma-vidya-vilasa and enjoyed the bliss of the contemplation of Atman.

On the morning of the Shuklapaksha Prathama of Paridhavi (Tuesday, 19th March, 1912), the Mahaswamiji, while seated in meditation after his morning bath, appeared to have fallen into a trance; this somewhat frightened the attendants who ran to the agent who was performing the worship of Chandramoulishwara and informed him of it. He left the Puja in the midst, went to the presence of the Mahaswamiji and saw him. As he had often seen the Mahaswamiji in such a state of trance, he was not frightened and took his seat close by in silence. After half an hour the Mahaswamiji returned to external consciousness and asked, “Is your Puja over?” On being told of all that had transpired the Mahaswamiji observed, “These people have unnecessarily disturbed you. As my body was greatly in pain, I engaged my mind in the ecstatic bliss of the Atman to the point of forgetting all about the body. These people have disturbed you under their mistaken notion.”

All that day, it seemed as though the Mahaswamiji was in great suffering. He bathed and performed his ceremonies but took no food. He spoke very little with others. When visitors came, he merely lifted his head and answered only by a smile.

On the next day, the Dvitiya of Shuklapaksha of Chaitra (Wednesday, 20th March, 1912), the Mahaswamiji had his bath at six o’clock in the morning. He then took a little milk after much entreaty of the agent and sat down. In about a quarter of an hour, he forgot all about the body and passed into deep meditation. The visitors who kept coming from about seven o’clock in the morning fancied that as the Mahaswamiji had had no sleep on the previous night he might be taking a little rest and were talking among themselves saying that the Mahaswamiji’s condition was better than the previous day. The Mahaswamiji continued to enjoy the bliss of the contemplation of Atman till quarter past nine. Then came a violent fit of coughing which lasted for an hour without intermission.

When it ceased, it was followed by tremors in the legs and arms. This suffering ceased at about eleven o’clock. The Mahaswamiji appeared greatly fatigued. With the head bent down, he sat motionless in his Padmasana (a yogic posture). Exactly at thirty minutes past eleven o’clock, his soul merged into the all pervading Supreme Brahman, leaving behind the bright smile alone which as before, was irradiating his face. The attendants who were near, saw his body lean back and lifted it and laid it on the ground. Such was the manner of the passing of this great yogi. No one was bold enough to say it was death. After half an hour, all came to the conclusion that the great Mahaswamiji had obtained Videhamukti, disembodied liberation.

The news of the videhamukti of the Mahaswamiji who knew no enemy among all mankind, who was so full of tenderness towards all living beings, who had the power of allaying the sorrows of men by a single look caused intolerable grief in all those that knew him. The Mahaswamiji had given orders while living that his body should be interred in his favourite retreat, Narasimhavana, and that the narmada-banalinga which he had been worshipping every day before he retired for the night should be installed over the spot. This was accordingly done.

The disciples who had gathered to pay their respects at the Mahaswamiji’s Adhishthana (shrine) resolved to erect a shrine of granite slabs over the spot of interment and entrusted the responsibility to the agent. Rupees thirty thousand were soon collected for the purpose. A celebrated sculptor of Bombay, Mr. Ganapati Krishna Rao Mathre, was now fortunately at Mysore. The agent requested the artist to prepare the statue of the late Mahaswamiji, which he gladly undertook in the belief that his artistic skill could be put to no nobler use. Ramaswami Chettiar, son of Chidambaram Chettiar of Kanadukattan, who was now completing the shrine of Sharadamba at Sringeri, undertook to erect a granite shrine over the late Mahaswamiji’s monument.

When both the shrines had been completed, the new Jagadguru, Sri Chandrashekhara Bharati Mahaswamiji (Sri Sri Sannidhanam) wished to perform the Kumbhabhishekam (consecration) ceremony of these temples together and thereby fulfill the intentions both of the Mahaswamiji and of his disciples. The fact of the temples having been completed and Sri Sri Sannidhanam’s eagerness to perform the Kumbhabhishekam ceremony was made known to the Maharaja and the Maharaja was invited to Sringeri on the occasion. It was decided that the Kumbhabhishekam ceremony would be performed on Thursday, the Krishnapaksha Prathama of Vaishakha, of the year Nala, S.S. 1839, (1916 C.E.) and letters of invitation were issued to all the disciples of the Sringeri Math throughout India. Priests were appointed to perform the various rituals connected with the Kumbhabhishekha ceremony that commenced seven days prior to the consecration.

A large number of disciples came to Sringeri to witness the ceremony and to pay their respects to Sri Sri Sannidhanam. His Highness, the Maharaja, came there with a small retinue. At 8 o’clock on the morning of the appointed day, Sri Sri Sannidhanam came to the temple built over the Adhishthanam of his great and revered Guru in Narasimhavana. His Highness, the Maharaja of Mysore, and the other guests also came there. The statue of the Mahaswamiji was installed in the temple, the kumbhabhisheka, pranapratishtha and other ceremonies were preformed. At ten o’clock on the same morning, the Kumbhabhishekha and pranapratishtha ceremonies were performed in the temple of Sri Sharadamba and Prasada was bestowed on the Maharaja as well as other disciples.

In the night, a public procession of Goddess Sharadamba in Ratha (chariot) was conducted with Sri Sri Sannidhanam seated in a palanquin. This gave great satisfaction to all the disciples who had gathered there. The people’s thoughts went back to the agadguru Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji. They praised his great virtues and now beholding Sri Sri Sannidhanam (Jagadguru Sri Chandrashekharaya Bharati Swamiji) installed as his successor, they rejoiced exceedingly and the sorrow they felt at the Mahaswamiji’s passing away was overcome to some extent.

On the next morning, the Maharaja came to Narasimhavana and having first worshipped the image of the Mahaswamiji, he performed Pada-Puja to Sri Sri Sannidhanam and received tirtha and Prasada from him.
The Maharaja took leave of Sri Sri Sannidhanam and left Sringeri for Mysore on Saturday, the Krishnapaksha tritiya of Vaishakha.

On the afternoon of the same day, Sri Sri Sannidhanam convened an assembly of learned men in the temple of Sri Sharadamba and in his sweet, inimitable style, propounded briefly the life of Sri Shankara Bhagavatpada and explained why Sringeri was chosen as the appropriate place for the founding of the Sharada Temple, how significant the dedicated contribution of his Guru – the Mahaswamiji, in renovating the temple was and what the duty of the disciples should be as regards the temple. Gifts of shawls and valuable cloths were then distributed among the Vidwans. The Gaekwad of Baroda had sent a representative on this occasion, who presented Sri Sri Sannidhanam with valuable gifts of cloths and jewels; Sri Sri Sannidhanam accepted the same and sent his blessings to the Gaekwad, with Prasadas.

Many of the most prominent among the disciples who had assembled in Sringeri, held a meeting on the afternoon of the same day of the Kumbhabhisheka ceremony, in the temple of the Mahaswamiji in Narasimhavana, and passed resolutions showing their appreciations of the Mahaswamiji’s greatness and virtues and stating that in order to show their gratitude to the Mahaswamiji, permanent arrangements should be made for the observance of the Jayanti (birth anniversary) of the Mahaswamiji on the eleventh day of the dark half of Phalguna, as well as the day of the his passing away, on the Shuklapaksha Dvitiya of Chaitra. It was resolved that for the purpose, a sum of fifty thousand rupees should be collected and the interest thereon utilized for these purposes. Accordingly, a subscription list was opened and a sum of twenty thousand rupees was subscribed on the spot. This was reported to Sri Sri Sannidhanam and was approved by him. The visitors to Sringeri having thus shown their devotion and having obtained Prasada from the Jagadguru Sri Sri Sannidhanam, departed to their homes.
11. Greatness of the Jagadguru

The love and compassion of this great yogi, Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Narasimha Bharati Mahaswamiji, was universal. He could not tolerate the sight of any one suffering in his presence. Even while walking, he took great care to avoid treading upon worms or insects. When he met people in distress and when they gave vent to their sorrows, the change in his countenance was such that it seemed as though he took up the burden of their sorrows and endured them. Not a day passed without his making inquiries whether the people around him had taken their food. If it came to his knowledge that someone could not get food, no matter how inconvenient the hour might be, he would insist on seeing that the person was fed. When sannyasins, old men or men afflicted with disease came to Sringeri to have his Darshan, he would ascertain for himself the arrangements made for their lodgings and meals; if he found any lapses, he would quietly arrange to rectify them without blaming any one.

The equanimity of the mind of the Mahaswamiji was extraordinary. He never differentiated people on the basis of religion, caste, age or worldly status. His conduct reminds us of that of Bhagavan. The Lord says:
I am the same towards all living beings. To Me, there is none detestable or none dear. But those worship Me with devotion, they exist in Me, and I too exist in them.)

Such indeed would be the trait of those who have treaded the path of the philosophy of non-duality and realized their identity with the Supreme God. With pundits, Yogis and Jnanis, he would discuss for hours on end the subtlest issues of philosophy and practice; with little children, he would himself become one among them delighting in their ingenious prattle and pleasing them with fruits and things they valued most.

The Mahaswamiji's devotion to God was exemplary, in accordance with the teaching of the Bhagavadgita, which says;

(An ordinary person does whatsoever a great man does; whatever the great man upholds as authority, the world follows that.)

The Mahaswamiji sought God through love and found Him. When he was barely two years old, he used to dance before the deity his father was worshipping, his tiny hands beating time to the music of his lisping words, out of child-love for all that is pure and holy; and when he grew up to manhood, it was the same love that threw him into the rapturous joy of fervent devotion.

He saw no difference among the deities Siva, Vishnu and Brahma. He was intensely earnest in his Bhakti. His method of performing Puja was a sight to see. None could hurry him in his Puja. He may have some one hundred idols before him. Each idol must be separately worshipped. Each must have its allotted Gandha, Akshata, kumkuma, and flower. Each must be praised. Each must be meditated upon. Of course, Sri Chandramoulishvara and Sri Sharadamba occupied the foremost place in his mind. He would never think of them as images but would feel their living presence. He would repeat Stotras with all the enthusiasm of a devotee. Hundreds of hymns in Sanskrit flowed from his lips as spontaneous outpourings of praise of and prayers to the deities he worshipped; the collection of his works came to be known as ‘Bhaktisudhatarangini’. No wonder, it seemed to the beholder of the Mahaswamiji’s Puja as though the deity that he was worshipping came and stood before him and conversed with him.

To say that such a great Jnani and Yogi possessed anima (a power with which one can become as small as an atom) and other Yoga-Siddhis, is not surprising in the least. Many people came to him desiring to be blessed with children or to be cured of diseases. It is well known that the Mahaswamiji never employed any means other than giving the sufferers Bhasma (sacred ash) or tirtha (holy water) or rarely, talismans or Upadesha (initiation). The method he adopted may have been different, but the result was the same – the suffering of the disciple was alleviated and their minds were suffused with bliss. Sometimes, the very Darshan of the Mahaswamiji was sufficient for the suffering of the devotees to disappear.

The Mahaswamiji’s devotion to his Guru was remarkable. He would talk for days together about the greatness of his Guru. All his talk, all his deeds, in short everything of his, he would dedicate to his Guru. His Guru was ever a living presence to him. He would consult him on each and every occasion. Without his express permission, he would never do anything. He would be never tired of worshipping his Guru. He was an incarnation of faith. His belief in the Vedas, Smritis and Puranas was unshakeable. His respect for those who observed a Dharmic life was overflowing.

The Mahaswamiji’s detachment to the world was impeccable. He never desired anything for himself. Even amidst activities that required his active involvement, he never felt that he was the doer. An enlightened yogi, the Mahaswamiji often forgot his physical body and spent hours in Samadhi, absorbed in Brahman. The highest Upanishadic truths, he would expound in an easily understandable style. The most knotty philosophical points, he would unravel in a marvelously easy way. Indeed, it is only possible for those who have realized the Atman and not those who possess bookish knowledge, to make known the truth of truths get into even untrained minds.
The Mahaswamiji had a great regard for the famous Jivanmukta, Sri Sadashiva Brahmendra, who lived in the eighteenth century (C.E.) in Southern India. The Mahaswamiji was never tired of reciting or listening to Atma-vidya-vilasa, the outpouring in poetic form of Sri Sadashiva Brahmendra on the bliss of the knowledge of the Atman. Oftentimes, when seated among his pupils, he used to ask one of his students to sing the verses of this poem. The Mahaswamiji would have passed into Samadhi on the Atman and become oblivious of his body and surroundings, within minutes after the commencement of the recitation.

Thanks to his excellent administration, the resources of the Math increased manifold and the money collected was spent on noble causes. The debts that had gone on accumulating for long were all paid up in the Mahaswamiji’s lifetime. The ancient and dilapidated buildings of the Math were rebuilt according to contemporary designs to provide greater convenience for public. The temple of Sri Sharada was originally built mostly of wood and, only to a very limited extent, of stone. During the time of the Mahaswamiji, it was wholly built up of stone structure. The Mahaswamiji earmarked sufficient funds for the spread of Sanskrit education; two Sanskrit Colleges were established. Monthly and annual grants were given to certain private institutions as well as scholarships to deserving students of all communities. It would be no exaggeration to say that that the Mahaswamiji’s reign was a golden era in the history of the Sringeri Sharada Peetham.
Hundreds of foreigners, educated men of alien faiths, came to have a sight of him and returned carrying with them the conviction that they had seen and conversed with an exceptionally great soul. Mr. Fraser, who was tutor to the Maharaja of Mysore, once remarked that in his own country and elsewhere visitors were treated to tea and the other things, while the Swami gave to his guests out of the fullness of his heart and they departed from his presence with the sense of their souls having been lifted-up above life's turmoil.

Pomp and splendour did not influence him in any way. He lived in the midst of luxury, with hundreds of attendants to minister to his personal comforts; the income of a rich Jagir at his entire disposal, princes laying their wealth and influence at his feet; but he stood aloof from all; his soul dwelt apart; he lived a simple life, an abstemious life, with not a thought for the riches that flowed to him unsolicited, absorbed in his praises of God, in his Vedantic studies and discourses; and if he emerged out of these, it was only to relieve the distress of those he saw around him, only to raise his fellow-beings from the depths of spiritual degradation into which they had fallen.

The Mahaswamiji is often referred to as “Abhinava Shankara” (Shankara reincarnated) as his life had several parallels to the life of Sri Shankara Bhagavatpada. There were several similarities between him and the first great master, Shankara Bhagavatpada. Both were born of their parents' tapas; both lost their father in early childhood; both became sannyasins before they were eight years old; both preached Vaidika Dharma. Shankara Bhagavatpada put-down the immoral practices which people were following in the name of religion; the Mahaswamiji substituted observances in the temples that were founded in his day, with Vedic methods. From the example of the Mahaswamiji, we can understand how Shankara Bhagavatpada could have combined in himself both veneration for the various concrete symbols of Godhead and impersonal contemplation in the ecstasy of ultracosmic consciousness – how the two may be useful each in a particular stage of spiritual advancement but that both may co-exist, though in different moods. For the rest, the Mahaswamiji was content to walk humbly in the footsteps of the Great Master Shankara Bhagavatpada, whom he worshipped as God-incarnate on earth, to establish righteousness and whose image, he set-up at Kalady, his birth-place. He was a realised soul, a master of the Shastras, a benign Guru, an accomplished Yogi, a magnetic personality and an excellent poet. Indeed, the Mahaswamiji was a sage par excellence.
I. Gurudvaya–Abheda–Anusandhanam

(Composed by the present Acharya, Jagadguru Sri Sri Bharati Tirtha Mahaswamiji, during the centenary year of the rediscovery of Sri Adi Shankaracharya’s Janmabhoomi kshetram at Kalady).

आर्याम्बाणिवर्त्तिष्ठ लक्ष्म्यभारामशास्त्रिणोः।

The Jagadguru who incarnated, for protecting Dharma, as the son of Aryamba and Shivaguru (in the form of Adi Shankara) and as the son of Lakshmamma and Rama Shastri (the Mahaswamiji).

अष्टं हायनेय यथा तुर्यमात्रमममग्नित।

He who took to Sannyasa at the age of 8 (both Adi Shankaracharya and the Mahaswamiji). He who wrote many works including the commentaries on the Prasthana Traya (Adi Shankaracharya) and He who revealed them all (the Mahaswamiji by getting them published).
He, the great One, who established the Sharada Peetham at Sringeri (Adi Shankaracharya). He, who adorned the same Peetham, for uplifting the masses (the Mahaswamiji).

He who took birth at Kalady (Adi Shankaracharya) and rediscovered it (the Mahaswamiji). He who consecrated Goddess Sharada at Sringeri (Adi Shankaracharya).

He who consecrated Goddess Sharada at Kalady (the Mahaswamiji). I prostrate to that Jagadguru who has taken a vow to bestow His Blessings to the world, and who revels in 2 names - Adi Shankaracharya and Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Narasimha Bharati.
II. Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Nrisimhabhaaraarati Ashthakam

(Composed by the present Acharya, Jagadguru Sri Sri Bharati Tirtha Mahaswamiji)

With a heart full of devotion, I constantly contemplate on the supreme Preceptor, Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Nrsimha Bharati, who took birth in the year Pingala (1858) and who revels in the worship of Lord Shiva, the consort of Goddess Sarvamangala.

Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Nrsimhabhaarati

Ashthakam

I contemplate on the foremost ascetic, Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Nrsimha Bharati, who grants both worldly enjoyment and liberation from samsara, who is like a honeybee hovering over the lotus feet of His Guru Sri Nrsimha Bharati, and whose accomplishments paralleled those of Mahayogi Sri Sadashiva Brahmendra.

I meditate on this great Guru Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Nrsimha Bharati, who revels in teaching the tenets of Sanatana Dharma and in curbing Adharma, and who is interested in granting bliss to the multitudes of His devotees.

I salute with humility the world-Preceptor Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Nrsimha Bharati, who has vowed to protect all the worlds, who sanctified the entire land by the dust under His feet, and whose mind always abides in the self-luminous Consciousness.

I meditate upon the supreme Preceptor Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Nrsimha Bharati, who is the Sun to the darkness (of ignorance) in the hearts of His disciples, who is the avowed protector of the scriptures and traditions, and who shone with scholarliness praised by the highly learned.

I recollect in the mind the supreme ascetic Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Nrsimha Bharati, whose lotus feet are worshipped by great yogis, who is devoid of all pride and conceit, who is revered by the whole world and who was like Agastya to the ocean of Vedas and Shastras (i.e. has drunk up the ocean of the Vedas and Shastras as Sage Agastya drank up the ocean).
I contemplate on the supreme Guru Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Nrsimha Bharati, whose glances are capable of bestowing auspiciousness and welfare, who is worshipped by kings, who has an unparalleled flow of speech and who fulfills all desires of those who worship Him.

For acquiring the qualities essential for spiritual progress like control of the mind and senses, I meditate on the world-Preceptor, Sri Sacchidananda Shivabhinava Nrsimha Bharati who worships Goddess Sri Sharadamba, Lord Chandramoulishwara and Lord Ganesha, whose fame is like the lustre of the clear autumnal full moon and who grants all auspiciousness and prosperity.
